11th-Hour Talks Seek To Avert TV Strike Today

CBS, ABC, Dumont 'Live' Shows Are Threatened; NBC Hookup Not Affected

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A Federal mediator continued eleventh-hour meetings with union television performers and three networks in New York early today to avert the industry's first strike, ordered for today.

Union performers were set to walk out on three major networks and one TV station after contract negotiations broke down earlier in the day.

The strike, called by the Television Authority, a combine of five AFL performers' unions, is aimed at Columbia Broadcasting System, American Broadcasting System, and the DuMont Television Network. The National Broadcasting Company's television hookup is not involved.

As a result of the walkout, virtually all the big live shows on the affected networks, originating in New York, Chicago or Los Angeles, will have to be canceled, according to union spokesmen.

The Associated Press reported from New York that Federal Mediator J. R. Mandelbaum had started conferences with the union, the three networks and station WOR-TV—an independent station involved—in the hope of "persuading them to rejoin the overall negotiations."

Local Broadcasts to Go On

Washington outlets for the three struck networks—WTOP-TV, WMAL-TV, and WTTG—will be permitted to continue with their regular local broadcasts, and with their regular network shows originating in the Nation's Capital, according to Wallace Cohen, spokesman for the Television Authority in this region.

"However, the networks will not be permitted to get around the strike by funneling network programs for origination here," Cohen said.

Word from New York last night was that the affected networks would attempt to keep their programming in operation, even if they had to use films. All the local television stations plan to keep in normal operation through the day today, either with what the networks have to offer, or with local programs.

Should the proposed strike affecting television performers be settled before airtime, programs listed for Sunday on page 6 of Section VI will be aired as scheduled. If the strike is in effect at that time, regular programs which will go on as scheduled will include:

WTOP—TV: Talk of the Town (local) 2; Wrestling from Hollywood (film) 3; Picadilly Playhouse (film) 4; Capitol Cloakroom (local) 5; Western Theater (film) 11:15 and News (local) 12:15. People's

34 Million Homes To Have TV by '55, GE Aide Predicts

CHICAGO, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—A top General Electric Co. official predicted today that television broadcasts will reach 34 million homes by 1955.

Dr. W. T. G. Baker, GE vice president, told the annual meeting of radio news directors that in five years, areas covering 71 percent of all American families will receive programs from two or more stations, and despite its tremendous growth television "will not sound the death knell for radio in the foreseeable future."

Baker, general manager of the GE electronics department at Syracuse, N. Y., said the public will rely mainly on radio and newspapers for news coverage "for a long time to come," with television providing an additional source of information.

Parents Must Govern Child, Catholics Told

Bishops Declare They Should Reassert Their Mastery

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

The Catholic Bishops of the United States yesterday issued a stern challenge to American parents to reassert themselves as masters of their children.

Their declaration carried an unmistakable reprimand to many parents for having abdicated their duties and privileges in respect to the school, the state and forms of entertainment where their children are concerned.

And their observations were extended to "the present grim international struggle" as they noted the American people have "committed themselves to oppose relentlessly the aggressions of those who deny to man his God-given rights, and who aim to enslave mankind under the rule of Godless materialism."

Views of the Nation's Catholic hierarchy on parent-child relationships, as expressed at their meeting concluded Friday at Catholic University, were set forth in an 8-page statement signed by the administrative board of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, including four cardinals, five archbishops and four bishops.

Views Set Forth in Paper

"The child must be seen whole and entire," they declared in a statement entitled, "The Child: Citizen of Two Worlds."

"He belongs to this world surely, but his first and highest allegiance is to God. From his earliest years he must be taught that he is destined for life with God in Eternity."

The 180 members of the Catholic hierarchy took sharp issue with advocates of sex instruction in schools and with those who want governmental agencies to take complete responsibility for care of orphans.

"We protest in the strongest possible terms against the introduction of sex instruction into the schools," they said.

Teaching Must be Broadened

Such instruction, to be of benefit, must be far broader than the "imparting of information," the declaration continued. Rather, it must be given individually, for sex "is bound up with the sacredness and uniqueness of the human personality."

If the facts of sex are properly taught in the home, a "deep rev-

Gospels Read In Marathon Session Here

By Bill Brinkley

And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up; and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read.—Luke IV, 16.

Washington's first public reading of the entire New Testament got underway at 5 a. m. yesterday and ended early today.

More than 70 persons from all walks of life, ranging from policemen to diplomats, took 15-minute turns in the reading at Foundry Methodist Church, 16th and P sts. nw.

The reading, according to the sponsoring Washington City Bible Society, was designed as "a unique testimonial to America's reverence for the Bible as the source of faith by which the Nation lives."

Lawyers, Government workers, businessmen, educators, students, Boy Scouts, housewives and soldiers served as readers.

The twelfth and thirteenth chapters of the Acts of the Apostles were read from Braille by a blind woman, Miss Cora Fitton. Her rate of reading was that of a seeing person's and, except for her swiftly moving fingers, one never would have known from the audience that it was a sightless person who read.

An hour of the scriptural readings was interpreted into

Surgeons Massage Heart 108 Minutes To Save Man's Life

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 18 (AP).—Drastic measures employed by two surgeons to save the life of a man whose heart stopped beating for 14 minutes were described today by the manager of a Veterans Administration hospital.

The emergency arose Tuesday during an operation on a 28-year-old veteran for removal of an eye at nearby Jefferson Barracks VA Hospital.

The surgeons made a quick incision in the man's chest and worked his heart with their hands for 1 hour and 48 minutes. Today the patient was reported in satisfactory condition and apparently on the road to full recovery.

Dr. John W. Claiborne, manager of the hospital, termed the action by the surgeons "a heroic step."

Tijuana Mafia Parley Linked To Killings

Crime Probers Hear Gang Rally Tied to Kansas City Slayings

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 18 (AP).—Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) said today his Senate Crime Committee is "extremely interested" in learning more about a convention of "narcotics and Mafia figures" called in Tijuana, Mexico, about the time of the Kansas City Binaggio-Gargotta slayings.

The lanky Tennesseean made that observation after a brief questioning of Frank Bompensiero, a San Diego cafe owner, as the committee wound up a three-day stand here.

Bompensiero said he made on the average of two or three trips a week last spring to Caesar's restaurant in Tijuana, about 10 miles from San Diego.

Narcotics Who's Who

There he said he dined and wined with such well-known narcotic figures as: Francisco (Three-Fingered) Cappola, Kansas City; Sylvester Carolla, New Orleans; Anthony Lopiparo, St. Louis; Tano Lacoco, Kansas City; Sebastiano Gallo, San Diego. Kefauver said there were others there including Giacomo Bartolina and Carlo Sciotarno, whose home towns were not given.

Kefauver said all are reputed leaders of the Mafia, the secret Sicilian crime society. Kefauver added that all have either been deported from, or denied admission to, the United States because of narcotics' convictions or links.

This group of "narcotic expellees from all over the country" gathered in the border gambling and bullfighting city, Kefauver said, shortly before the April 5,

Top Citizens To Investigate Loyalty Policy

President Reported Seeking Persons Of Integrity for Job

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

A broad investigation of the Government's entire security and loyalty problems by a committee of top citizens is being considered by the President, it was learned yesterday.

"The study definitely will be made," an official explained, "if the President can persuade the outstanding citizens he has in mind to accept the assignment. Otherwise, it would do very little good to make such a study."

Persons of unquestioned integrity such as former Supreme Court Justice Owen D. Roberts, Admiral Nimitz, former Chief of Naval Operations; General Eisenhower, Henry Ford, jr., Charles Wilson of General Electric, and several leading attorneys and college presidents have been mentioned as possible appointees to such a study committee.

McCarran Act on List

Among the problems the proposed committee would be asked to study would be the McCarran anti-Communist act, the Federal employe loyalty program, the security law under which Government workers in sensitive agencies can be fired summarily, and the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Central Intelligence Agency, and other such agencies charged with keeping the Nation secure.

The proposed committee would be asked to advise both the President and the Congress on the effectiveness of present security laws and activities and what

The Magic of Gettysburg

4 Score and 7 Years Later— His Words Are Imperishable

GETTYSBURG, Pa., Nov. 19 (AP).—Four score and seven years ago today, Abraham Lincoln stood here and said a few words.

It was the immortal Gettysburg address.

Lincoln spoke to dedicate a cemetery for the Union soldiers who were killed here in the Civil War's greatest battle, which raged for three days from July 1-3, 1863.

What Lincoln said:

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Two Pedestrians Killed On U. S. 1 in Hit-Run Accidents

Two pedestrians were killed about 4 miles apart, within 15 minutes, while they walked on U. S. 1 near Triangle, Va., in hit-and-run accidents last night.

Virginia State police immediately broadcast a 13-State lookout for a maroon four-door sedan, believed to be involved in both accidents.

The first accident was at 6 p.m., when Pvt. Gerald O. Spangenberger, 17, of the 325th Air Borne Infantry, Fort Bragg, N. C., was knocked off the road and down a 15-foot embankment by the car. He died instantly.

Police said he and his half-brother, Joseph R. Yellen, 20, of Milwaukee, Wis., who were hitchhiking to New York, were walking along the edge of the highway about a half mile north of Triangle when the victim was hit.

At 6:15 p. m., an unidentified civilian was found dead of a fractured skull near Boswell's Corner, about 3 miles south of Triangle.

Police said that, although his body was found after the soldier was killed, they believe the same hit-and-run driver may have struck him first and then continued north to the spot where the soldier was struck down.

The civilian had no papers or other means of identification with him and only 2 pennies in his pocket. Police described him as being about 30 to 35 years old, 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighing 160 pounds. They said he was "fairly well-dressed."

In Washington, George W. Comack, 60, of 818 26th st. nw., was critically injured about 10 p. m., when he was struck by a taxicab at the District end of Memorial Bridge.

Comack was admitted to Emergency Hospital with head injuries. Police identified the cab driver as George H. Shaw, 55, of Vienna, Va.

Republicans Draft Own Profits Tax

Substitute Measure Would Allow Choice Of Excess Levy or Upping Present Rate

Republicans opposing President Truman's excess profit tax plan proposed a substitute of their own yesterday and said it would raise more revenue.

Sponsored by Representative Reed of New York, top Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, the GOP substitute would give corporations the choice of either paying an excess profits tax or taking an increase of 10 percent in the present 45 percent corporate tax rate.

If the taxpayers elected to pay under the excess profits alternative, the amount of tax paid would have to be at least 50 percent of the current year's earnings.

Reed's plan would remain in effect until December 31, 1952.

The Administration program, designed to add four billion dollars a year to the Federal Treasury, has no cutoff date. It would tax excess business profits at 75 percent, using the four-year period 1946-1949 as a yard stick.

Reed gave no details of his substitute proposal but said he would offer it to the committee Monday.

"It will raise more revenue and at the same time safeguard the national economy," he said in a statement. "Every corporate taxpayer would have to pay his fair share and . . . new and growing businesses would not be stifled."

Reed said three days of Ways and Means Committee testimony have made it "perfectly clear that the enactment of Mr. Truman's proposals would cut the heart out of the productive capacity of our country and seriously impede our defense program."

More Businessmen Heard

Reed announced his plan as a parade of business spokesmen continued to attack the President's program.

More than a dozen of them testified at an unusual Saturday Ways and Means Committee session. The committee has a mandate from Congress to have an excess profits tax bill ready for consideration after the lawmakers reconvene on November 27.

The committee will hear several score more witnesses before closing hearings Wednesday.

Yesterday's witnesses, as were others, were required to confine testimony to excess profits taxation. They were not allowed to give details of other tax plans which they claim would be more equitable and just as profitable for the Treasury.

Belvoir Recruit Issued War II Kit of Brother

Army Recruit Terry F. Spann won't soon forget his older brother's war record—unless he stops eating.

Spann of Headland, Ala., was issued a mess kit, or "meat can," when he arrived at the Fort Belvoir engineer center. He eagerly tore the paper wrapping off his new possession and inspected its shiny bottom.

Inscribed there was: "Sergt. Clarence Spann, ASN 343286677, Italy—'45, Pisa, Florence, Rome, Naples, Leghorn, Lucca."

The kit had spanned a five-year period—from older brother, Clarence, a World War II Air Force man, to younger brother, Terry, a 1950 recruit.

More Post Departments Move Today to New L St. Building

Today is moving day for the advertising, circulation and several other business departments of The Washington Post.

Starting Monday morning, these departments will do business from their sixth-floor quarters in the new Post building at 1515 L st. nw.

But the "front counter"—the service desk where want ads may be placed and back issues picked up—will remain temporarily at the old building at 1337 E st. nw.

These other departments also will remain at the E street location until further notice—executive offices, accounting, purchasing and personnel departments.

Like last weekend's move of the composing room and the news department, today's advertising and circulation transfers are scheduled to avoid any interruption of service to the public.

Yesterday the Fidelity Storage Co. moved the mimeograph, addressograph and letter-mail rooms and the stock room into their new home.

Today's moves include promotion, copy layout, general retail, classified, real estate and classified telephone advertising, and circulation.

Moving the classified telephone room is this weekend's most difficult changeover, since that department is the only one in advertising which normally operates on Sundays.

Three telephone solicitors will remain on duty in the old building until 7 p. m. today—usual closing time for the classified telephone department.

The telephone equipment—known in the trade as No. 4 Order Turret—is the last word in classified telephone gear. The intricate monitoring board and wiring in this telephone room alone call for about 10 miles of wire.

Soviet Serves Peace Plan Ultimatum

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—Russia's Andrei Y. Vishinsky today declared there can be no lasting world peace until the United Nations admits the Chinese Communists and adopts a long list of other Russian proposals.

Senator John Sparkman (D., Ala.), United States delegate, accused Russia of trying to bulldoze the United Nations and said the free world could not accept such a "bartering of peace."

He said Vishinsky had now made it clear that Russia would accept no program for world peace that did not comply with Soviet demands. He said for the U. N. to bow to such demands would leave it incapable of acting except with Soviet permission.

The Soviet Foreign Minister, in a slashing one-hour-and-10-minute speech to the U. N. General Assembly, declared it would be

GOP Readies Policy Fight With Acheson

Ferguson Decries Name Calling, Others Ask Program Review

By The Associated Press

Senate Republicans served notice yesterday that if Secretary of State Acheson is asking for a fight over foreign policy it won't be long in coming.

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) lashed back at what he labeled the "name-calling" tactics used by Acheson in attacking a proposal by Senator Taft (R., Ohio) that Congress reexamine the scope and character of military aid to western Europe.

Senator Flanders (R., Vt.) called on Acheson to "face the facts of life" and agree to a resurvey of international commitments. Flanders said Republican gains in the November 7th election make such a reexamination inevitable.

Knowland Hits Tito Aid

In a statement at Taipei, Formosa, Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) announced he will fight proposed emergency aid for Yugoslavia so long as the Truman Administration denies help to the Chinese Nationalist government and follows a "policy of appeasement in the Far East."

In another phase, some Republicans appeared likely to challenge Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) in his role as a GOP leader in the field of foreign policy. This group was organizing to back Knowland for a place on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that Vandenberg said ought to go to Senator Morse (R., Oreg.). Morse has said he supported the Administration's foreign policy objectives while disagreeing sometimes with its methods.

The Republican flare-up came as the result of a Friday night speech in which Acheson took some Republicans to task. They claim they are not isolationists, he said, yet they want to uproot foreign policies and "reexamine" them. He compared them to a farmer who pulls up his crops to see if they are growing. Yanks Occupy Town Only 21 Miles From Manchuria; Attack In Sub-Zero Cold

SEOUL (Sunday), Nov. 19 (AP).—Tank-supported U. S. infantry today captured bomb-devasted Kapsan in northeastern Korea and pushed on toward the Manchurian border 21 miles north.

Associated Press Correspondent Tom Stone, moving with the United States Seventh Division in near-zero weather, said troops of the Seventeenth Regiment entered the town at 10 a. m. (8 p. m. EST Saturday).

He said the Americans ran into only light resistance in covering the last 2 miles to the town that had been levelled by air attacks. When the Seventeenth's final push started this morning there had been reports that Korean Red defenders were dug in just south of Kapsan.

The infantry plunged 4 miles Saturday through a snowstorm and minor Red resistance to within 2 miles of Kapsan. The temperature plummeted 34 degrees in four hours.

Supply Line Reopened

Behind the Seventh Division ice and snowdrifts blocked the main U. N. supply route in northeastern Korea Saturday night but traffic was moving again today.

To the northeast the South Korean Capital Division renewed its march up the coast toward the Soviet Siberian border. Shelling by the United States cruiser St. Paul was clearing the way.

In the northwest, 100,000 Chinese and Korean Communists were reported digging in on a 60-mile front below the great hydroelectric plants on the Yalu River border between Korea and Manchuria.

These preoccupied Reds offered only light resistance to patrols ranging 8 miles or more north of Allied lines.

Only scattered rifle fire was reported by leading elements of the Seventeenth Regiment in Saturday's advance.

Tanks "Sidestep" Boulders

Associated Press Correspondent Tom Stone reported from that front that the Reds who escaped tried to block the American advance by blasting boulders down onto the road with dynamite.

The tanks merely turned off the road into snow-covered fields and rumbled around the obstacles.

Maj. Gen. David G. Barr, commander of the Seventh Division, came up to the front from division headquarters at Pukchong.

"We're coming along real well," Barr told Stone. "Some of the wooden bridges up the road have been blown out and they've found a number of mines, but we'll move ahead as fast as we can.

"Just how fast we go depends a

Dynamite Blast Wrecks Telephone Cables in W. Va.

MILTON, W. Va., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Two long lines cables were dynamited east of here tonight wrecking 90 percent of the long distance telephone circuits and teletype wires between Charleston and Huntington, W. Va.

State police called the remote blast scene an "ideal" spot for sabotage.

CIO Communications Workers of America have been picketing telephone exchanges in key West Virginia cities in the current Nation-wide strike of telephone workers. However, police did not link the dynamiting and the strike.

State police said one stick of high explosive was wired to each of the cables and set off at a remote spot east of here. Only 25 percent of the damage was reported repaired late tonight.

Korea Airlift Carried 100,000 Passengers

FEAF COMBAT CARGO COMMAND, Japan, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—The American airlift in Korea carried 25,000 sick and wounded soldiers during its first two months of operation, Maj. Gen. William H. Tunner reported today.

The commander said the airlift carried more than 63,000 tons of bullets and beans and 100,000 passengers in that period, one fourth of the latter casualties.

It provided the only available means of flexibility in supply required to meet the fast-shifting war situation, Tunner said. When enemy counter attacks set back United Nations forces, the airlift switched cargoes from gasoline and rations to urgently needed ammunition in 24 hours.

"The pontoon bridge across the Han River probably was the first bridge ever to be air-lifted, and while it weighed only 365 tons, it required hundreds of man-hours of back-breaking labor by our ground loading crews to get it into our transport aircraft," he said.

Tunner, who also commanded the Berlin airlift, started the Korean airlift September 19 by flying men and supplies into Kimpo Airfield while GIs still were fighting for nearby Seoul.

Only by air, he said, could the right kinds of supplies be sent to the right places in the right quantities. Other means either were not adequate or did not exist. The Korean airlift went far beyond the Berlin operations, he said, to demonstrate the value of flying freight cars in a war, although it used far fewer planes.

Tunner said flights were mobilized in one day to parachute troops beyond the front lines and resume the continuous mass cargo lift to forward fields the following day. When U. N. troops pushed beyond land supply facilities in pursuit of Communists in North Korea, the airlift provided gasoline and rations which then were the most urgently needed items.

"Then, within 24 hours after the enemy counterattacked in strength, we had changed our cargoes from gas and rations to ammunition to meet the demands of the battlefield," Tunner said. "This is a logistic flexibility that our armed forces need, and only an airlift has that flexibility."

Dead, Wounded

2 Generals' Sons Korean Casualties

The son of an Army officer here was wounded and the son of a retired Army officer, formerly of Washington, was killed in action in Korea, it was reported yesterday.

Wounded was Richard L. Gruenther, 25, son of Lieut. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, the Army's deputy chief of staff for plans, who lives at Fort McNair.

Killed was Lieut. Tenney Kutz Ross, 24, son of Brig. Gen. Lewis T. Ross USA (ret.), and Mrs. Ross, of Webster Grove, Mo.

Ten days after receiving a battlefield promotion to captain, young Gruenther was hit in the upper abdomen by a rifle bullet which perforated the liver, the Army announced.

General Gruenther, contacted at his Fort McNair home, said he had heard his son's condition was "satisfactory."

Although no official notification arrived, a telegram was received from an unidentified friend of Captain Gruenther who accompanied him to the field hospital in northern Korea, he said. The Associated Press reported the Army as saying his condition was "satisfactory."

A graduate of West Point in 1946, Captain Gruenther attended parachute training school at Fort Benning, Ga. He was a member of the United States Olympic team in 1948, finishing eighth in the "modern pentathlon" event.

Sent to Japan in the fall of 1949, he was with the Eleventh Airborne Division until that group returned to the States. He then transferred to the Seventh Infantry Division, Seventeenth Infantry Regiment, as a company commander.

A week before the Korean outbreak—June 17—he married a Red Cross worker in Japan.

Lieutenant Ross was the grandson of former District Engineer Commissioner Brig. Gen. Charles W. Kutz, U.S.A. ret., and Mrs. Kutz, of 2028 Allen pl. nw., and Col. Tenney Ross, U.S.A. ret., of 2915 Connecticut ave. nw. His sister, Mrs. Charles F. Crichton, lives at 4835 New Hampshire ave. nw.

He was a graduate of Woodrow Wilson High School and of West Point in the class of 1948. He was wounded in action in Korea in August, but rejoined his regiment after hospitalization in Tokyo.

Besides his grandparents and sisters, he is survived by his parents, Brig. Gen. Lewis T. Ross, U.S.A., ret., and Mrs. Ross, of Webster Groves, Mo., and another sister, Mrs. S. N. Karrick, jr., whose husband, Major Karrick, is stationed at West Point.

Marine Corpl. Douglas E. Totten, husband of Mrs. Betty Totten, formerly of 3473 Holmead pl. nw., was reported killed in action on November 4 by the Department of Defense yesterday.

According to the Navy Department, where Mrs. Totten worked in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, the dead Marine's wife moved to Kentucky shortly after Corporal Totten left for Korea in August.

Corporal Totten enlisted on July 6, 1939, the Casualty Division records show. He was in the Guadalcanal campaign in World War II, and later served in Newfoundland. He was stationed at Quantico Base, Va., and the Naval Gun Factory prior to leaving for Korea with the First Marine Division.

Marine Pfc. Leonard L. Walker of Box 425, Thompson ave., Severn, Md., was recorded as killed in action on the same list. S/Sgt. Joseph A. Jagiello, of 3 Euclid ave., Winchester Va., a Marine, was also killed in action.

lot upon the weather, the condition of the roads and bridges, and the opposition."

The weather, however, was a major factor.

The Seventh Division's main supply route from the east coast of Korea was cut off by snow and ice conditions Saturday night in a mountain pass 50 miles behind its front.

Sixty-mile-an-hour winds piled snow 10 to 12 feet deep in the pass. The road below the snow block was reported "a sheet of ice."

General Barr said supplies would be air-dropped if the road remained impassable for any length of time.

"There is nothing to worry about," he said.

Barr said a Communist captured Friday by the Seventeenth Regiment told interrogators his regimental commander was shot by the Red commander of the sector for retreating before the American advance.

In the far northeast, a South Korean Capital Division spearhead, advancing up the coast road, reported no opposition. This column was headed for Changjin, last big town before the Siberian-Korean border.

Allied fighter-bombers attacked Red trucks pulling back before the Republican troops.

Another spearhead of the Capital Division was blocked 8 miles north of Myongchon by small arms and mortar fire from two Red companies.

A United States Tenth Corps spokesman said he believed the delay would be only temporary.

The spokesman said United States Marines on the east and west banks of the Chanjin reservoir in north-central Korea were consolidating their positions without harassment.

Marine patrols reported Chinese Communist troops still in mountains west of the reservoir. The Reds fired small arms from long range, then withdrew.

Intelligence reports indicated Red strategy apparently was to pull back from the northeast front and form a line in the northwest between the Yalu River power plants and the Allies' expanding Chongchon River bridgehead.

Intelligence sources at United States Eighth Army headquarters estimated 28,000 Chinese Reds and 70,000 North Korean Communists were forming that line, from Taechon, 45 miles south of the Yalu River, to a point about 60 miles east of Taechon.

Allied patrols roamed up to 8 miles beyond the Chongchon line Saturday. They met only light rifle fire from groups of 12 to 15 Reds.

South Korean Eighth Division troops captured additional high ground north of the lateral Kunuri-Sunchon road.

Red Jet Shot Down By U. S. Fighters

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18 (AP).—Panther jets of the United States aircraft carrier Valley Forge shot down a Russian-built MIG-15 jet fighter Saturday near Sinuiju, Korea, opposite the Manchurian border, the Navy reported.

The hostile plane, the Navy Public Information Office said, was one of seven to nine that made sweeping passes at a flight of eight Panther jets covering a bomber attack.

The Navy said also that planes from the Aircraft Carrier Leyte's Air Group Three destroyed two bridges over the Yalu River at Hyesanjin Friday and damaged two others. Hyesanjin is a Korean border town north of the United States Seventh Division sector in northeast Korea.

London Gets Behind United Europe Plan

STRASBOURG, France, Nov. 18 (AP).—A spokesman for the British Labor Government today suggested a regional federation by continental nations wishing unity and he pledged British support.

Britain had not evinced enthusiasm for federation in the past.

James Callaghan, parliamentary secretary for the British Admiralty, told the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe that nations which want union now have a green light from London.

He spoke in a discussion of a report from the Committee of Ministers—the dominant upper house of the council—delivered in person by Committee Chairman Carlo Sforza, Italy's foreign minister.

"There is an expression in English about the dog in the manger," Callaghan told the delegates from 15 nations. "Well, this dog has jumped out of the manger. The hay is there, succulent and waiting for those who want it."

Callaghan said some nations should go ahead with specialized agencies—such as the Schuman coal-steel pool plan—if they wish.

"We would have no hesitation in encouraging the discussion, experiment and creation of such specialized authorities and we will do our best to work with them," the Briton said.

He added that the Assembly should use the powers it already has instead of criticizing the Committee of Ministers. The Assembly is limited to discussion and recommendations. The ministers have veto power. Britain's foreign secretary, Ernest Bevin, has drawn criticism in the Assembly for his adverse action on many proposals.

The Assembly opened its second session of 1950 today. About 2000 persons jammed the public galleries.

Sforza urged the assemblymen to push the cause of European unity among their own electorates. He suggested they set up commissions for on-the-spot studies of obstacles to unity moves. A third world war, he warned, is likely unless "we are ready to surrender a portion of national sovereignty to a superior body."

Pierre-Henri Teitgen and Paul Reynaud of France, backed by Ireland's Thomas O'Higgins, jr., precipitated a sharp debate on the ministers' rejection of various amendments to a projected convention on human rights.

In Rome, the ministers signed the convention in the form they themselves had drafted, and referred nearly all of the Assembly's amendments to experts for further study.

Korean Veteran To Take Post at Naval Air Station

Comdr. William R. MacDonald, recently on duty in Korean waters, will become executive officer at the Naval Air Station in Anacostia Monday.

MacDonald

The last three months he served as executive officer on the carrier, Philippine Sea, which participated in the amphibious assault on Inchon.

A native of Aspinwall, Pa., Commander MacDonald graduated from the Naval Academy in 1933. He received his wings at Pensacola, Fla., in 1936 and served with the fleet until 1941.

Paris Unifies Indo-China War Control, Will Rush More Aid

PARIS, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—The government completed plans today for rushing additional troops, tanks, planes and other war material to hard-pressed French forces struggling to hold back the Communist "second front" offensive in Indo-China.

At a meeting lasting nearly five hours, the cabinet decided:

To speed dispatch of additional troops and heavy equipment, much of it supplied or financed by the United States.

To concentrate full control of the Indo-China war with Jean Letourneau, Minister for the Associated States, and to give him a free hand to call on the Defense, Shipping and other ministries for manpower, supplies and ships needed for the campaign.

To defend with all available resources the rice-rich Red River delta, now directly threatened.

After the cabinet meeting, a government spokesman said United States Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall recently had promised to divert immediately two groups of American B-26 medium bombers, totaling 50 planes, from Korea to Indo-China.

The spokesman said these planes which will provide the first big reinforcement for France's small, out-of-date air forces in Indo-China, would be refitted in the United States and arrive in Indo-China "in the very near future."

The cabinet meeting followed a series of secret conferences in the past few days between Premier Rene Pleven and the nation's top military chiefs. A further cabinet session on Indo-China was expected next week, after which Pleven on Wednesday will make a government statement in Indo-China to the National Assembly.

Tewksbury Made Ambassador To Paraguay

President Truman yesterday appointed Howard H. Tewksbury as Ambassador to Paraguay.

Tewksbury will replace Ambassador Fletcher Warren, brought back from Paraguay to become director of the recently organized State Department Office of South American Affairs.

Tewksbury, 55, now is deputy director of the Office of South American Affairs. He has had about 30 years of diplomatic service in Latin America.

His last field assignment was in Buenos Aires where he served as counselor for economic affairs in the United States Embassy from 1945 to 1947.

D. C. January Army Draft Call Set for 185; U. S. Quota 40,000

Washington's draft quota for January calls for induction of 185 men, Frank Norton, District deputy director of Selective Service, announced yesterday. The national quota for January is 40,000.

Because the local draft boards already have substantially met their quota of 342 for November, and because of the Thanksgiving holiday, the District plans to omit its weekly inductions next Wednesday. On November 29, a half dozen draftees will be sent to the Arlington Farms induction center to fill out the quota. Also, approximately 75 men who have failed to show up for preinduction examination, will be ordered to report for induction then.

The smoothly operating District Selective Service System is currently planning to fill its December quota of 177 in the first half of that month in order to avoid making any inductions at all during the Christmas season.

2 Aerial Bombs Found Under Airport Runway

ROME, Nov. 18 (AP).—Two huge aerial bombs that lay under the main runway of Ciampino International Airport for five years were discovered last night after thousands of planes had trundled over them.

The discovery was made by a guard, attracted by a glint of metal in the soil under the steel mat runway. Experts decided against attempting to remove the bombs and they were detonated. Authorities said the bombs apparently were buried in the ground and forgotten.

U. N. Is Urged To Condemn Tibet Invasion

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 18 (AP).—El Salvador formally demanded tonight that the United Nations condemn Red China for its "unprovoked aggression against Tibet." It also proposed creation of a special committee to study what measures can be taken by the U. N. General Assembly to aid Tibet.

The new move by the delegate of El Salvador, Hector David Castro, followed his request to Secretary General Trygve Lie that the Assembly give the invasion of Tibet an airing.

Castro said that when he first raised the issue last Wednesday he had hoped that the Assembly could act without referring the question to the 14-nation steering committee, but that he was ready to appear before the steering committee, if necessary, to press for action.

This was disclosed when the U.N. made public Castro's original request for action, a supporting memorandum, and the proposed resolution calling for a special committee.

Nasrollah Entezam, Assembly president, said he would put the proposal before the 14-member steering committee Monday, after the Assembly adjourns, or on Tuesday. The Assembly will have to vote whether it wants to consider the resolution.

Castro has shown no inclination to drop the question despite the coolness of other delegations to U. N. intervention.

Minister Says India Will Back U. N. Action

NEW DELHI, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—A member of the Cabinet's Foreign Affairs Committee announced today that India will support Tibet's appeal to the United Nations for aid against Chinese Communist invaders.

At a weekly forum held by the Indian News Chronicle, Minister of Transport Gopalaswamy Iyengar said India has decided to back Tibet's case against China because the Peiping regime had resorted to violence before trying a peaceful settlement.

Reds Address Appeal To India on Tibet

NEW DELHI, Nov. 18 (AP).—In an apparent effort to soften the sting of her two rebukes, Red China today appealed to India through Radio Peiping to "understand fully China's action on Tibet."

The broadcast, monitored here and considered as having official sanction of the Communist Chinese government, told India the United States and Britain were using China's atempts to "liberate" Tibet to "cause a breach of friendship between India and China."

The broadcast followed China's sharp reply yesterday to a second Indian note demanding a peaceful settlement of the Tibetan question. Although that reply was described here as more courteous than the Red regime's first, it was equally unyielding and uncompromising in its insistence that India not interfere.

Radio Peiping left unanswered India's two pressing questions:

Why China went back on her word to solve the Tibetan question peacefully, and why China began hostilities against the "most peaceful people in the world" when Tibetan delegates were on the point of leaving India for Peiping for peace talks.

GOP Readies Foreign Policy Fight

ence to Taft, he said these "re-examinists" seemed the same to him as isolationists.

Taft, in Cincinnati, had no comment.

Ferguson told a reporter Acheson appears to believe that anyone who differs from him on foreign policy or seeks to find out the facts behind decisions is an isolationist. The Michigan Senator said this won't deter him and others in seeking this information.

Ferguson Decries 'Name Calling'

"I regret the Administration's defense of its foreign policy has degenerated to name calling," Ferguson said.

"This leads to the conclusion that the secretary's conception of bipartisan policy is his own policy. In contrast there are others of us who believe bipartisanship means constructive cooperation in the formation of policy as well as its execution and that only that kind of bipartisan policy can serve the Nation's best interests."

Flanders, who has supported major administration foreign policy moves in the past, sided with Ferguson and Taft in calling for a new look at American commitments abroad.

Flanders said the election results "indicate there is going to be a re-examination of foreign policy by Congress.

"That is just simply one of the facts of life and the Secretary of State had better take cognizance of it," the Vermont Senator said.

"I shall be a 'reexaminist'—if that is what Acheson wants to call us because I think the people made it clear that is what they want.

"I do not fear any serious upsetting of the program for Europe in that connection, so long as the reexamination is made objectively."

Taft said at a recent news conference he favors continued efforts to build up Western Europe's defenses and is willing to send more American troops to that area. He said, however, he believes the election indicated "lack of confidence in the President's foreign policy and the present administration."

Flanders Compliments Acheson

Taft has called for Acheson's resignation, but Flanders said he thinks the Secretary of State "has done a real good job since the Korean war began."

"His mistakes are of the past but they are going to hang on to his coattails for a long time," Flanders said.

Knowland's opposition to the proposal to provide about 85 million dollars in economic aid to Yugoslavia was not shared by Flanders. The latter said he believed it was a good idea for this country to promote "every opening we can find in Communist countries where assistance and human contacts are involved."

President Truman has asked members of the appropriations committees of both Houses to consider in the lame duck session providing economic aid for drought stricken Yugoslavia. The Communist government of Marshal Tito has broken with Moscow.

Comparing the Administration's attitude toward Yugoslavia and toward the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa, Knowland said:

"The Republic of China has never shot down any American planes. Yugoslavia has.

"The Republic of China offered 33,000 troops to support collective security in Korea. Yugoslavia has offered no troops.

"The Republic of China has voted consistently with free nations in the United Nations relative to aggression in Korea. Yugoslavia has seldom done so.

"There is freedom of religion, press and speech in Formosa. This does not exist in Yugoslavia.

futile even to try to negotiate a settlement of East-West disputes without the participation of the Chinese Reds.

He also laid down a series of preliminary conditions that he said must be accepted before Russia would even consider a 10-point, 20-year peace plan submitted by Secretary General Trygve Lie.

These other points, embodied in a Soviet resolution now before the Assembly, are:

1. A pledge not to try to get around the veto.
2. Unconditional prohibition of the atomic bomb.
3. Armed forces under exclusive control of the Security Council.
4. Aid to backward countries under international control.
5. Development of international trade without discrimination.

Sparkman said acceptance of these points would "force the United Nations to adopt the Soviet demand for an atomic energy program without adequate safeguards.

Found Useless, He Says

"It would force on the United Nations a plan for United Nations armed forces that military experts of the world have found useless and inadequate," he said.

"Mr. Vishinsky tries to bulldoze into the Lie peace program United Nations recognition of the Chinese Communist government, although only 17 of the 60 members of the United Nations legally recognize that government. . . ."

The Soviet conditions, it is believed, are similar to those Lie rejected when they were proposed to him personally by Prime Minister Stalin during his trip to Moscow last May.

Soviet Delegate Jacob A. Malik told the Security Council last month that Lie's refusal to accept Stalin's suggestions about what the plan should contain was one of the reasons the Soviet Union opposed his reelection as Secretary General.

The Russians have argued for these points repeatedly in the past two years, and the assembly has consistently rejected them in favor of alternate proposals submitted by the United States and other Western democracies.

In repeating them today, Vishinsky laid special stress on the admission of Red China to the U. N. and said nothing at all can be decided until this is done.

Called U. S. 'Loudspeaker'

The fiery Russian shouted that the fact that Lie did not include such a demand in the plan he submitted to the Assembly showed that he was acting as a "loudspeaker" for the United States and that his plan was, in reality, written by officials in Washington, London and Paris whom Vishinsky called "those plotters of a new war."

He said the plan was designed only to camouflage the activity of the warmongers until they are ready to pull the trigger setting off World War III.

The section of Lie's plan that most aroused Vishinsky's ire called for periodic Security Council conferences attended by high-ranking officials of member governments. It did not name the states and Vishinsky demanded that the Communist Peiping government be specified by name.

Lie's plan, besides calling for periodic high-level conferences, would provide:

Renewed attempts to obtain international control of atomic energy. Vishinsky denounced this section because it did not demand outlawing of the atomic bomb.

A new approach towards disarmament. Vishinsky insisted this should specify that the great powers reduce their armed forces by one-third.

New efforts to set up units of armed forces in U.N. countries, to be made available to the U.N. under the charter.

Universality of membership.

Technical assistance to underdeveloped countries through all agencies—private, national and international.

More vigorous use of U.N. specialized agencies in the fields of social progress.

More vigorous observance of human rights.

Advancement of colonial peoples.

Faster development of international law.

The Assembly adjourned without voting on either of the two propositions and scheduled another session for Monday morning.

THIS TIME IT'S FOR KOREA

Last Sunday at church we heard about the Korean clothing drive. The announcement awakened us from our lethargy (it was otherwise a dry sermon) and gave birth to an idea. We are going to help this drive and later other worthwhile organized charities in the following way:

Each week we will select five of our slower-moving dresses, suits and coats and place them on a special rack at 10 per cent markdown. Each succeeding week an additional five garments will go on the racks, with the preceding five garments being marked down another 10 per cent. If the garments aren't sold by the time they are marked down to cost price, they will be turned over to charity!

And now, we have another innovation to offer you wee Washington women, you size 7s and 9s. Wednesday has turned out to be our poorest sales day. Here is what we are going to do about it:

On Wednesday you can purchase any dress, suit, coat, skirt, blouse or raincoat in the store at 10 per cent discount! These discounts will not affect our free alterations policy on dresses, suits and coats. These discounts will not raise our basic prices which satisfied customers will tell you are the lowest in Washington for comparable garments.

So, drop in for a leisurely, non-sales pressured "look-see" at what we believe is the largest selection of size 7 and 9 dresses, suits, coats, skirts, blouses (size 30) and raincoats in Washington. Either you or charity benefit.

6 Nations Set to Sign Coal, Steel Pact Pool

PARIS, Nov. 18 (AP)—Six West European nations are set to pool their coal and steel under a history-making treaty based on the Schuman Plan.

Delegates of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands, who have been hammering out the details in six months of negotiations, report the pact will be signed next Thursday or Friday.

The plan takes its name from French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman, who suggested the pool last May 9. The primary French aim was to prevent another war between Germany and France.

Together, the six nations produce about a third as much steel as the United States, where the output is now hovering between 102 million and 106 million tons a year. The ratio of coal production is similar.

Delegates Meet Monday

Delegates to the pool talks will meet Monday to polish up phrasing of the document they drafted to "change the destiny of these regions, for so long dedicated to the making of arms of war."

It may be four or five years before the pool plan is fully in operation and running smoothly. It undoubtedly will require months before any concrete steps can start the pool on its way. Cabinet ministers, due here shortly after December 1, must get the approval of their governments on the document, and work out the high level details.

But the negotiators have all but finished the foundations for what they say is a "safeguard for world peace that is equal in scope to the dangers that threaten it."

The economic effect of the pact, when it is in full operation, will be to erase the historic and often blood-thirsty competition of these nations to sell the output of their mines and mills.

To Avoid Price Gouging

Politically, the negotiators are convinced, the effect is deeper. Schuman in suggesting the pool said "the rallying of European nations requires that the secular opposition of France and Germany be eliminated."

The delegates believe the Schuman Plan will achieve that purpose, among others.

One of the other purposes is to protect from price gouging the consumer of steel—the man who buys a shovel and the woman who buys a can opener. Another is to spur the rearmament of western Europe.

Most diplomats believe the creation of the Schuman Plan treaty will remove the differences between France and the rest of the Western world on rearmament of Germany. The formula for reconciling the differences still is being worked out.

Plowshares in the Ruhr

Germany has agreed, during pool negotiations, to abide by the pool's provisions banning cartels, those groupings of related industries which allow one man or group of men to control trade empires that can be harnessed to war.

This triumph in negotiation, according to the planners, means that the Ruhr Valley—which made the tools for wars of Bismarck, the Kaiser and Hitler—now is destined to make plowshares for peace—or swords for all the Allies alike.

Some 40 million metric tons of steel will be pooled by the six nations annually by the time the pool gets into operation, according to estimates of the United Natins' European Economic Commission. The commission placed estimated steel production for 1952, for instance, as follows: France (with the Saar) 14,800,000 tons; West Germany, 13,500,000 tons (this takes in an increase recently approved from the Allied-imposed ceiling of 11,100,000 tons); Belgium, 4,850,000 tons; Luxembourg, 3 million tons; the Netherlands, 820,000 tons; Italy 3 million tons.

One of the aims of the pool is to raise both wages and productive efficiency in the coal mines. Belgium, which diverts about one-fifth of her 26 million-ton annual coal output into steel furnaces, pays the highest wages to miners, but charges the highest prices for coal.

British Bloc Attacks U. S. Military Aid

LONDON, Nov. 18 (NYHT).—A powerful left-wing bloc within the British Cabinet is pressing the Labor government to declare Britain's full independence of American military aid and to pare Britain's rearmament program. It is believed the Cabinet has not yet officially studied these proposals.

Cabinet moderates, such as Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and Chancellor of the Exchequer Hugh Gaitskell, do favor, it is known, changes in the existing relationship between Britain and the United States.

They are seeking a formula that would permit Britain to appear as the United States' "partner" in working out a defense pattern for the West, and not as another nation sharing the America military dole.

But the dissidents within the Cabinet—they probably include Health Minister Anehrin Bevan, War Secretary John Strachey and Supply Minister George Strauss—wish to go even farther.

Dr. Poling Questions U. S.-Far East Policy

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Dr. Daniel A. Poling, chairman of the All-American Conference to Combat Communism today, questioned the wisdom of United States foreign policy in the Far East.

Dr. Poling said the United States is spending billions to support the Democratic countries of Europe in their fight against communism but wasn't following through in the Far East.

Rogge Assails Reds for Use Of Violence

WARSAW, Poland, Nov. 18 (U.P.). Former Assistant United States Attorney General O. John Rogge charged Communists today with "use of force" to gain their ends and warned that the United States will not tolerate breaches of world peace by the Reds.

He declared only prompt United Nations intervention in Korea had saved Germany from a similar fate.

Rogge, one of the founders of the World Peace Congress, said that body now is identified with Soviet foreign policy. He said if he had to do it all over again he would not sign the Stockholm Peace Appeal.

Rogge's statements were in the form of a speech to be delivered either today or Monday to the congress, but it was questionable whether they would be heard.

Communist sponsors "already have asked him to cut his speech in half" and, he recalled, he was not allowed to deliver a similar speech in Prague last August. He is attending the present session as an observer, not as a delegate.

"Step by step," Rogge said, "we have been drifting into a preventive war. . . . If we do not succeed in taming the extremists a live-and-let-live agreement between the Communist and capitalist worlds is impossible and war is inevitable. "Of the two concentrations of power, the one in the Soviet Union troubles me more than the one in my own country."

GOP Leaders to Meet Here for 1952 Study

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

Guy George Gabrielson, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has called a meeting of GOP leaders for December to make plans for 1952, when the Presidency will be at stake.

The meeting, which is to take place here, will bring together members of the executive committee of the national committee.

Chairman Gabrielson, in issuing the call, said that the militant organizations in the various States which helped the party to make gains in the 1950 election were "just a start toward our goal—the strongest Republican organization in the party's history."

'Real Battle Ahead'

"The real battle lies ahead," he said, "and the Republican Party is going into it with all the vigor and determination and enthusiasm that two years of constant effort can create.

"President Truman made it plain at his press conference that he doesn't regard the results of the recent election as a rebuke to his policies, and will continue to press for his program of socialism in the new Congress.

"Republicans gladly accept that challenge. I am confident that they will continue their drive to meet it at the polls with a high-spirited, hard-fighting and hard-working organization in every precinct. An informed and aroused electorate will reject Trumanism in 1952 just as it did in 1950."

William M. Boyle, jr., chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has delivered a similar "fight talk" to the Democrats. In the latest issue of Capital Comment, issued by the committee, Boyle urged party members to start working for the 1952 battle "right now."

Summing up the election results, and looking into the future, Boyle said:

Democrats Boosted

"The Democratic Party won a real victory in keeping control of the Congress and cutting down the normal mid-term gains which the Republicans have made consistently in 'off-year' elections since 1938.

"Republican gains were held to a much smaller total than those of 1938, 1942 or 1946, and the credit goes to our program, the quality of our candidates, and—last but not least—to the good organization job done by our party leaders and workers.

"The Republican gains will mean that the GOP will have unlimited funds with which to campaign full-time from now on until November of 1952. They will have powerful allies with large funds to spend for propaganda and lobbying.

"That means that all of you must keep intact the organizations that were built up for this year's campaign. You must strengthen them. And you must keep them working full-time from now on to cambat the powerful forces which will be working against us . . . The 1950 vote shows that we cannot afford to relax in the face of the challenge of the next two years . . ."

The Republican executive committee which Chairman Gabrielson has announced will meet here December 8 is made up as follows: Officers of the national committee, 15 at-large members of the national committee; John Tope, chairman of the Young Republican Organization; Mrs. Joseph R. Farrington, chairman of the National Federation of Women's Republican Clubs; Senator Owen Brewster of Maine, chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and Representative Leonard W. Hall of New York, chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

At the meeting, Chairman Gabrielson will outline the results of a post-election survey among party leaders to determine the factors that worked to the advantage and disadvantage of the Republicans in the recent election.

In the questionaire, Gabrielson asked their views on the following subjects: Issues contributing to victory or defeat; successful techniques used by either side; effectiveness of organizational machinery, and special help from outside groups, such as labor, business or the healing arts.

Tighter Law On Election Funds Urged

By the United Press

Chairman Guy M. Gillette of the Senate Elections Subcommittee said yesterday Congress must tighten up the election laws to meet the "serious threat" posed by ever-increasing campaign expenditures.

The Iowa Democrat told the United Press skyrocketing spending threatens to eliminate Senate candidates of "limited means" unless they are willing to accept large contributions from pressure interests—and the "strings" which may go with them.

He said his Rules Subcommittee, which is looking into the recent Senate campaigns in four States, plans to recommend action to plug loopholes which have almost nullified some sections of the election laws.

He said, for example, the $25,000 top Federal ceiling for Senate campaign spending has been "subverted" by the general practice of creating special committees which are supposed to operate independently.

The Corrupt Practices Act does not limit the amount a special committee may spend within a single State. But it fixes a 3-million-dollar ceiling if the committee operates in more than one State.

(In Ohio, as one instance, Senator Robert A. Taft reported to the Secretary of State that he personally spent only $1,529.14 in his campaign against Democrat Joseph T. Ferguson. But contributions by various committees swelled that total to $243,740.80—with the Taft-for-Senator Committee alone reporting expenditures of more than $137,000.)

"I don't know just what the solution is," Gillette said, "but it looks as if all contributions should perhaps be routed through one central point."

Adding to campaign costs, he said, is increasing use of radio, television and motion pictures, in which there is keen rivalry.

Gillette has proposed the committee hold public hearings on the Pennsylvania Senate race in which Gov. James H. Duff, Republican, unseated Senator Francis J. Myers, Democrat.

The subcommitte also has investigations pending in Senate contests in Kentucky, Iowa and New York. It did not send investigators into Nevada, Utah and Ohio because complaints from those States were "too general."

Nonfarm Jobs Hit New High In October

By The Associated Press

An all-time record high of 45,769,000 persons held non-farm employment in the Nation in mid-October, the Labor Department reported yesterday.

Factory workers alone numbered 15,757,000, the highest total since the war. This was a gain of 70,000 between mid-September and mid-October.

However, the month's gain in total nonfarm employment was only 89,000, reflecting minor seasonal reductions in contract construction and elsewhere.

During the four months from June to October, covering the period of Korean hostilities, nonfarm establishments added 1,800,000 employes because of rising demand for goods and services.

Brannan Unveils 2 Farm Programs in Talk

Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan has unveiled two new programs for agriculture, in addition to reaffirming his support of the Department's farm price support rogram, known as the Brannan Plan.

In three imortant speeches, ending at Bismarck, N. D., yesterday, Brannan outlined the present aims of the Department as including:

1. Support of the principle of family-owned and family-operated farm, with new legislation if necessary, as opposed to absentee farm landlordship and corporation or other types of huge farming operations. Recent widespread purchases of farm land by city dwellers, as protection against (a) possible atom bombing of our big cities, (b) inflation, and (c) to cash in on present profits in farming, particularly meat raising, have caused concern in Brannan's department. Agency heads met with Brannan in several conferences recently, to outline measures to halt the trend.

2. A grasslands program for agriculture "as a base for balanced livestock farming, sustained abundance and good nutrition," in conjunction with the Associaion of Land-Grant Colleges and Universities.

3. Measures "designed to encourage the orderly marketing of perishable commodities, such as meat, milk and dairy products, poultry and eggs, and furits and vegetables"—the aim of the misnamed Brannan Plan.

Family Farms Termed Vital

The American type of family-owned and family-operated farms, Brannan told the North Dakota Farmers Union yesterday, "must continue strong here if the principle of family farming is to be the center of hope in the world-wide struggle for the minds of men."

The same theme had been dwelt on the day before when Brannan talked to the National Grange in Minneapolis, and earlier in the past week before the Land-Grant College Association meeting here.

"In many parts of the world," Brannan declared at the Bismark meeting, "vast numbers of landless, hungry and despairing peasants are stirring with the inherant desire for self-betterment through social revolt. They are looking for any change that kindles hope. But too often they are grasping in the wrong direction.

"Most of such unrest throughout the world today can be traced to insecure and inequitable land tenure. Under such conditions, farm people do not receive an equitable share of what the land produces; they have no stake in the land upon which they toil. Such patterns of land ownership create nothing but hopelessness among peasants who work the soil, and make them an easy prey for communism's glittering false lures.

"But family farming and family land ownership is the historic American pattern—not the Soviet pattern. And it is only in this American pattern that restless peasants of the world can find the ray of hope they seek.

"Widespread land ownership, security of tenure, and equitable landlord-tenant arrangements are all part of the basic fabric of democracy. By improving the economic opportunities for family farmers and for family farm ownership, we offer our best proof of the right to leadership in behalf of farm people throughout the world—leadership to land and liberty."

Brannan pointed out what he called "disturbing signs" that America is not "doing all that can be done to increase opportunities for farm ownership and to preserve the family farm tradition."

"Although on a statistical basis farm ownership has made rapid gains during the last decade, much of the increase can be attributed to establishment of small part-time farms, and even rural residences near our large cities.

"Recently we have been hearing reports of heavy purchasing of farms by nonfarmers, and of rapid increases in land values. Such developments tend to make it more difficult for young men to get started in farming."

Brannan declared that he hoped that the Department of Agriculture may be able to:

1. Develop and put into operation such changes as are possible under existing legislation in "policies, programs and procedures that would result in improving our services to family farms and farm families."

2. Develop for Congress a comprehensive set of recommendations for changes in existing legislation that would authorize the Department "to improve still further its services to family farms and farm families. Consideration could also be well given similar steps that would enable the land-grant colleges to expand their contributions in this field."

The matter Brannan said, is "of such importance" that he was asking cooperation of all the major farm organizations, the various State departments of agriculture, the land-grant colleges, and State and county agriculture councils, P.M.A. organizations, and others.

"Our end goal," he said, "is the strengthening of democracy through the most effective service to the family farm."

Folger Library Opens Exhibit On Thanksgiving

The Folger Shakespeare Library has opened an exhibit of books illustrating the English background of America's Thanksgiving Day.

The exhibit is designed to show that days of prayer and thanksgiving are of ancient origin, and that the Pilgrims, who held their first Thanksgiving in 1621, brought the practice to the New World with them.

Earliest book on display is a prayer book published in connection with a formal thanksgiving proclaimed in 1580 to celebrate England's escaping destruction by earthquake.

George Sees Lower Tax Exemptions

By the United Press

Senator Walter F. George (D., Ga.) said yesterday any increase in individual income taxes next year probably will mean lowering personal exemptions back to the wartime low of $500.

George, chairman of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee, made that forecast to the United Press when questioned about statements this past week from President Truman and Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder. They indicated higher personal income taxes may be proposed next year to pyramid the increase which became effective last October 1.

"If we're going to get much from individuals, we'll have to lower the exemptions," George said in a telephone interview from his home at Vienna, Ga. "It would raise a good deal of money but it would mean a good deal of hardship in view of the high cost of living."

Rate May Go Up, Too

He foresaw a return to personal exemptions of $500, the figure used on wartime tax forms. Since the 1948 tax cut bill, individual exemptions have been $600. That means an exemption of $600 apiece for the taxpayer, his wife, and each of his dependents.

George admitted that another income tax increase also might mean some raise in the rates, along with the reduced exemption.

While he has expected a general tax bill next year, "all on the upside" to finance new defense spending, he said he had believed personal income taxes would not be raised again on top of the boost in the stopgap war tax bill last summer. He noted, however, that Mr. Truman's excess profits proposal would raise only four billion dollars.

"If we're going to have to raise six billion or seven billion dollars more," he said, "there's no way to do it except from individuals and from new taxes."

Will Press for Bill

In the face of forecasts from many Senators that there will not be time for Congress to enact an excess profits tax this year, George promised nevertheless to do all he can to see the Senate passes a bill during the session which meets November 27. But he said it probably will be necessary for the House to pass the bill during the first week of the session if the Senate is to finish it this year.

He said Senate committee hearings must be held inasmuch as the House committee has refused to hear alternative plans. He would not comment on the Administration recommendations but indicated he was not enthusiastic about applying the proposed tax to all corporation earnings in excess of 75 percent of the postwar average.

He said he will do all he can to pass a bill "dealing with abnormal profits."

Study Group to Meet

The Eastern Suburban Area Study Group will meet Tuesday at 10 a. m. at the Montgomery Blair High School, Silver Spring, Md., to discuss expediting construction of a swimming pool, and plans for meeting special needs of junior high school children.

Republicans Draft Tax Bill

Ralph W. Button, New York, speaking for the National Retail Dry Goods Association, started yesterday's testimony by asserting that an excess profits tax is inflationary, discourages business growth and paralyzes new and expanding companies. Like most other witnesses, he preferred increases in regular corporate and individual income levies and in excise taxes.

Arthur J. Packard, Mount Vernon, Ohio, speaking for the American Hotel Association, said an excess profits tax would encourage "unwise and even reckless spending."

Through John F. Lebor, Cincinnati, the Retail Industry Committee supported a pay-as-you-go tax program to foot the cost of defense but said "it is impossible to write an excess profits tax bill that does not create more problems than it solves."

Paul M. Geary, Washington, executive vice president of the National Electrical Contractors Association, Inc., advocated "the utmost economy in Government" and imposition of "a defense tax levy which could take the form of a simple increase on the surtax rate."

Others who testified yesterday included John S. Dawson of the Bridgeport Brass Co., Bridgeport, Conn.; Thomas Tarleau, Chicago, of the National Retail Furniture Association; A. R. Kaiser, Chicago, of the Mail Order Association of America; Raymond H. Schultz, Chicago, speaking for debtor corporations; C. F. Hotchkiss, president of Stow Manufacturing Co., Binghamton, N. Y.; George Mitchell, vice president of the National Biscuit Co., New York; John J. Ellsworth, treasurer of the United Carr Fastener Corp., Cambridge, Mass.; Ezra A. Hale, president of the Lawyers Cooperative Publishing Co., Rochester, N. Y.; Edward G. Lowry, jr., of the General Reinsurance Corp., New York; Elden McFarland, of the Wurlitzer Co., Washington, and A. Harding Paul, Washington, representing miscellaneous companies.

Only 15 of 76 'Lame Ducks' Are Eligible for Congressional Pensions

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Only 15 of the 76 members of Congress who served in the Eighty-first Congress and will not return to the Eighty-second are eligible for the pensions voted in 1946.

A check yesterday revealed that three former Senators and 12 former Representatives have attained the right combination of age and service to be eligible for annuities now averaging $3087.

One member, Representative Robert F. Rich (R., Pa.) won't take any of the pension due to him on the basis of 20 years service. He said, when he announced his retirement earlier this year, that he would distribute his pension to charity.

41 Not Eligible

Forty-one members, 4 Senators and 37 Representatives, will not be eligible for pension, having served less than six years. They can leave their paid-in premiums in the kitty, in the hope their constituents may change their minds next time, or draw out with interest the premiums they have paid.

That leaves 6 Senators and 14 Representatives who must wait 1 to 15 years until they become eligible at 62. These members, all with more than six years' service, cannot collect cash for paid-in premiums with interest.

Only two, both House members, would be eligible for the maximum $9375 a year for 30 years' service, provided they have paid up back premiums for the 26 years before 1946. They are Representatives Earl C. Michener (R., Mich.) and James W. Wadsworth (R., N. Y.), both over 62 and both with 30 years in Congress.

The status of a member's pension account cannot be determined. It is considered doubtful, however, that many had paid up premiums for a great many years before 1946. These premiums are fixed at 2½ percent of the member's salary before 1926, 3½ percent from 1926 to 1942, and 5 percent after 1942. Quite a few thousand dollars (no one seems to have figured how much) would be needed to bring a 30-year account up to date.

Taylor Collects in 1966

Representative Stephen M. Young (D., Ohio) can start collecting next year on eight years' service, or whatever part of it he has paid premiums for. At the other end of the scale is Senator Glenn H. Taylor (D., Idaho), who must wait until 1966 to begin collecting for his six stormy years in the Senate.

Pensions for Congressmen were enacted in the Reorganization Act in 1946 after a much more liberal scheme enacted in 1942 had been hastily repealed as a result of public indignation. The 1942 Act required no payment for previous service and only nominal premiums for service after its passage.

It could not be determined yesterday whether all retiring members would be eligible for pensions, since no list of those who have applied has been published since 1947. At that time a partial list was issued, which included many of the members who will not return next January.

Big Sum to Beat Reds Spent by Forrestal

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—The American Mercury magazine says James V. Forrestal, late Defense Secretary, quietly spent at least $150,000 in private funds in Europe in a passionate fight against communism.

It said some of the money went to defeat the Communists in Italy's 1948 election and some to a "prominent Communist leader" to end a French transportation strike in 1947.

The article, by William Bradford Huie, Mercury editor, said Forrestal recognized the dangers of communism and struggled to arm the United States.

Set to Be Sun Editor

It added that, shortly before Forrestal was hospitalized, friends of his planned to purchase the New York Sun and make him editor so he could continue his campaign to arm America. The Sun later was purchased by the World-Telegram.

Concerning his financial intervention in Europe, the magazine article said:

"In Dember, 1947, when France was paralyzed by a general transportation strike, Forrestal summoned his most trusted friends to Washington. He told them that necessity demanded the use of dollars in Europe for birbes.

"He explained that he had spent all the Defense Department's 'non-voucherable funds,'" as well as much of his own money, and that more was needed.

"His friends produced $50,000 immediately; the money was carried that night to Paris by an American intelligence officer and paid next day to a prominent Communist leader. The strike ended within 12 hours."

The magazine said Forrestal also spent private funds on his own responsibility in the Italian elections.

The article said further that after his health was broken in "his crusade to make this country strong," he was not permitted to have visits from a priest.

Sheehy's Visits in Vain

The Rt. Rev. Maurice J. Sheehy, of Catholic University, Washington, called at Bethesda Naval Hospital six times at Forrestal's request but on each occasion was unable to see him, the magazine said.

The Mercury said Forrestal, whose father was a Catholic, drifted from the Church but had asked Monsignor Sheehy to help him return to the Church.

It quoted Monsignor Sheehy as saying:

"Had I been allowed to see my friend, Jim Forrestal, receive him back in the Church, and put his mind at ease with the oldest and most reliable medicine known to man, he would be alive today."

Asked for comment, Monsignor Sheehy told the Associated Press in Washington that he had called at the hospital about six times after learning Forrestal wished to see him and was told each time it would be better if he came back a few days later.

He said that after talking with then Navy Secretary John L. Sullivan he won permission to see Forrestal the following week, but Forrestal's suicide plunge from a hospital window intervened.

Single RFC Head Urged By Fulbright

Senator Fulbright (D., Ark.) said yesterday he favors a single administration for the multi-billion dollar program of Government loans to business and industry.

These loans now are made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under a chairman and four directors appointed by President Truman. The appointments are expected to come up for Senate confirmation at the short session of Congress starting November 27.

Fulbright's proposal for replacing the directors by a single administrator could bring a clash between Congress and the White House.

"But I admit the chances are against any new idea," Fulbright told a reporter. "It would be an uphill battle and I would not delay action on the nominations unless there was real support in Congress."

Fulbright is chairman of a Senate banking subcommittee investigating RFC loans. The group has been critical of some of these loans and RFC lending policies.

"I think the Government lending agency should be independent and as free from political influence as is possible," Fulbright said. "It appears to me a single administrator would be a business-like way to operate RFC. We certainly should be able to get a first-class man because he would have so much power."

Vargas Acts Fast To Head Off Move On Presidency Bar

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Nov. 18 (AP). — President-elect Getulio Vargas acted swiftly today to head off any move to keep him from power by marshaling the support of army leaders.

Political observers said the former dictator and his followers, during the past 36 hours, had sapped the strength of his political foes and enlisted the support of military leaders.

It was rumored yesterday that attempts were being made to prevent Vargas from taking office on January 31. Petitions were being signed by a number of deputies asking Brazil's Congress to extend its term, as the first step in a plan to nullify the October 3 presidential election by charging irregularities.

Two army generals today declared it was a mandate of the people that elected Vargas and it should be strictly observed. The same theme was stressed in a speech, published yesterday, by Gen. Estilac Leal, commander of the army's south zone, the strongest of the nation's four military areas.

New Bid to Block TV Strike

Platform at 5:30, being a public service type of program, may be permitted to go on the air. A special local show, presenting the four District finalists in the "Voice of Democracy" contest, will be aired at 6 as planned.

WTTG: Our Secret Weapon (discussion involving non-TV-A members), 6:30; Art Jarrett's Rhythm Rodeo (involving non-TV-A members), 8; the Gibson Playhouse (film), 10.

WNBW: N.B.C. programs are not expected to be affected.

Local TV stations will announce substitute programs—primarily film—during the regular broadcast day.

The cease-work order affects such television stars as Arthur Godfrey, Perry Como, Frank Sinatra, Fred Waring, Burns and Allen, Faye Emerson, Chico Marx, and Paul Whiteman.

Not affected by the walkout, because their shows are carried over NBC, are such top attractions as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Milton Berle, Bob Hope, Fred Allen, Groucho Marx and Eddie Cantor.

The Television Authority, which claims to represent 25,000 performers, is spokesman in the industry for five AFL unions: American Federation of Radio Artists, American Guild of Musical Artists, American Guild of Variety Artists, Actors Equity, and Chorus Equity.

Numerous issues involved in the strike include performers' rates for original programs rebroadcast by films, original pay scales and the length of rehearsal periods, the Associated Press reported from New York.

George Heller, executive secretary, for the authority, told reporters that the three companies to be struck had told him that "it was useless to continue negotiations" on the basis of TVA demands.

"NBC did not agree," he said, "with that position and believes that every effort should be made to explore possibilities of arriving at a peaceful solution."

Heller added the other three networks and independent Station WOR-TV took an "adamant position" that left TVA "with no other recourse" than to strike.

These four companies issued a joint statement expressing regret at the suspension of negotiations and declaring they made "what they consider generous proposals covering wage, hours and working conditions for the performers."

The companies stated union proposals led them to "conclude that unreasonable and harsh penalties would be placed upon an industry that is still in the development stage." They said the TVA demands would place such burdens on advertisers and networks that "a number of important programs might be forced off the air."

Heller asserted a major issue was a union demand for a clause restricting the reuse of kinescope programs (films taken of original shows). He declared such reuse reduced employment in the industry. The union insisted, he said, that performers be paid their original fee every time a program was repeated in film from an area where it already was telecast.

Heller added that the union also wanted the same pay scale for commercial and sustaining programs. He said the networks offered 75 percent of the commercial rate for sustaining programs, which are sponsored by the networks themselves.

The union spokesman said the companies had offered actors speaking five lines or more: 15-minute shows, $70, including six-hour rehearsal; 30-minute show, $125, including 14-hour rehearsal; hour-shows, $175, including 24-hour rehearsal.

Heller said both sides agreed on pay for actors speaking less than five lines; 15-minute shows, $50, with five-hour rehearsal; half-hour shows $62.50, with seven-hour rehearsal, and hour-shows, $75, with nine-hour rehearsal. He added TVA wanted time in the first two categories cut to three and six hours, respectively.

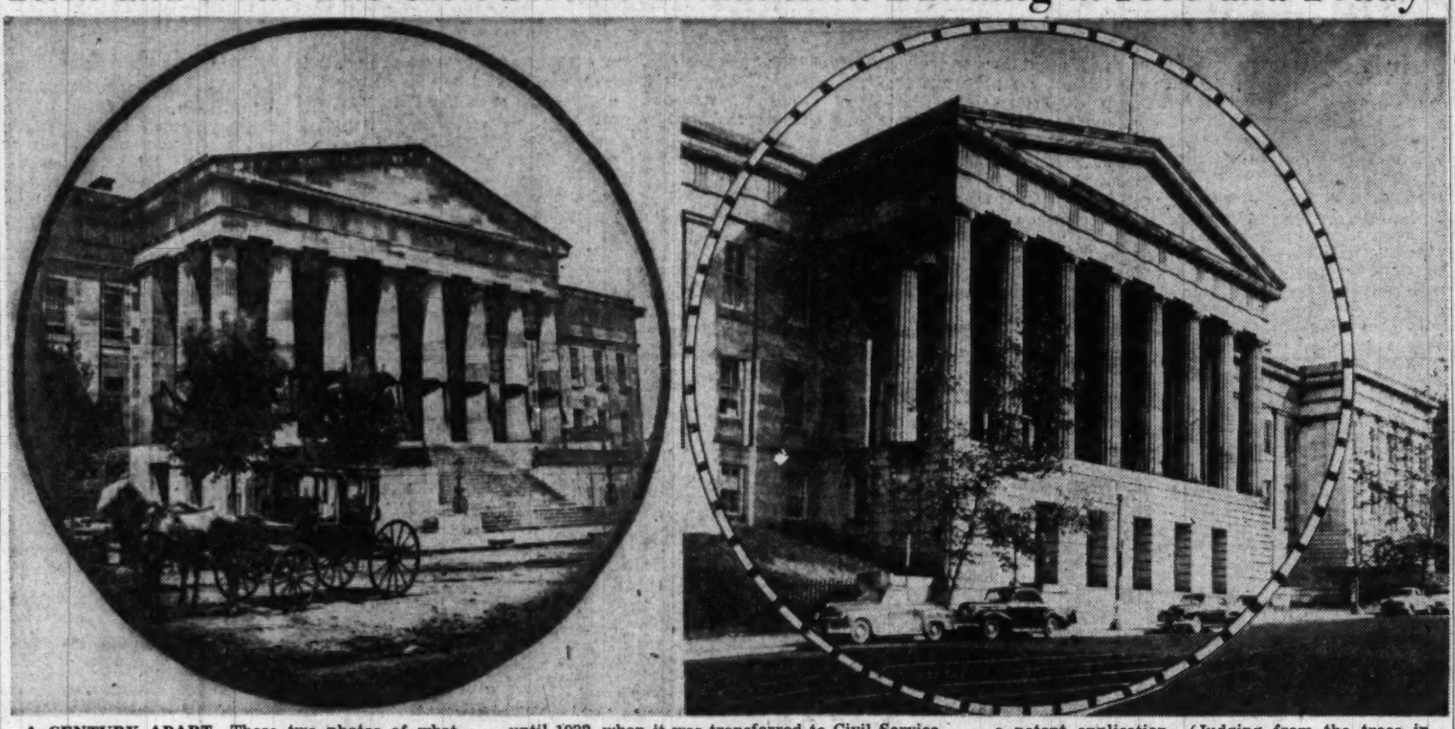
Then and Now: The Civil Service Commission Building in 1850 and Today



A CENTURY APART—These two photos of what is now the Civil Service Commission Building were taken 100 years apart. In that century F st. has changed from a lazy dirt road with horse and buggy to today's paved thoroughfare and attendant auto traffic jams. One of Washington's first public buildings for the executive branch of the Government was the Patent Office—now the structure above. In classic style, it was first occupied in 1840, with wings added as late as 1867. The Interior Department once occupied a wing, but otherwise the big building housed only the Patent Office from 1840 until 1932, when it was transferred to Civil Service.

Constructed of Virginia freestone and Maryland marble, its Doric columns and simple lines are in contrast to much of the later gingerbread Government architecture. The huge flight of steps was removed in 1936 when F st. was widened.

The photo at left has historic importance, for it was submitted to the Patent Office on November 19, 1850, by Frederick Langenheim, a noted photographer of the day. Langenheim, appropriately enough, took a picture of the Patent Office because he was submitting a glass-plate negative process as a patent application. (Judging from the trees in the photo, he may have taken it sometime before November 19.)

The mourning bands on the building were for President Zachary Taylor, who had died July 9 from the effects of sitting too long in the broiling sun at a Washington Monument Fourth of July celebration. A Mississippi Senator talked so long the President went back to the White House and quenched his thirst by drinking too much iced milk and eating too many cherries changes should be made to insure the security of the Nation. It would not be asked to study disloyalty charges against any Federal employes. Instead, it would be asked to help devise a system that could be used to keep disloyal persons out of the Government service if it finds itself dissatisfied with the present loyalty program.

The President vetoed the McCarran anti-Communist bill and he has implied he will seek modification of it after Congress passed it over his veto. If the advisory group is set up, he may postpone any changes in the law he has in mind until after it makes a report on it.

Meantime, the new Communist Control Board, set up to administer the McCarran law, is about to begin operations. It has been assigned space in the RFC building. The Budget Bureau has tentatively approved operating funds for it from the President's emergency monies, and a budget for the remainder of this fiscal year will go to Congress shortly after it reconvenes.

The board, headed by Seth W. Richardson, former chairman of the Loyalty Review Board, also has approved rules and regulations under which it will operate and hear cases. The rules will be made public sometime this week.

Control Child, Catholics Told

erence" will be developed in the child, who will be "spared the shameful inferences which he often makes when he is left to himself to find out about sex," the bishops said.

As for governmental care of orphans, they found it "a source of growing concern to us that in certain parts of our country there is a trend to regard this whole field of foster care as falling within the exclusive province of governmental authorities."

The state "surely" must set up and enforce legislative minimum standards of care for the dependent child, said the bishops. But "there is a definite place . . . for the voluntary agencies of mercy—particularly those operating under religious auspices, which are equipped to safeguard and develop the religious life of the dependent child."

The bishops went on to delineate church's position on the relationship between home and school, the duties of the father in rearing the child and the obligation of parents to regulate their children's hours and company.

Since "the home is the child's first school," it should be for him "a good example of Christian living" lest he become "confused by the contradiction between what he is taught and what he sees practiced."

The bishops reminded Catholic parents that they are acting within their rights when they set up their own school system, because "it is they, and not the state, who possess the primary right to educate."

They recommended that public authorities "look with favor" on released-time religious education programs.

"The state, which has demonstrated a genuine interest in so many aspects of the child's welfare, should not be indifferent to the inherent value of religious instruction and training for the child attending tax-supported schools," the bishops' statement continued.

Parents must bear in mind that there are "only two courses open to the child—either he will be God-centered or self-centered."

Thus the "continuance and well-being of a state based on democratic principles require that it show a lively concern for moral principles and practices which are firmly grounded only in religion."

One of the parents's responsibilities, the bishops warned, is to maintain "a close association between home and school . . . so as to facilitate an exchange of views and confidences, regarding the child."

But the mother is not the only one on whom this burden falls, said the bishops. It is not enough for the father to provide the material means of support for the family, they added.

He also has the obligation to identify himself with the interests and activities of his child, including the matter of sex instruction—lest the child "see it apart from the controlling purpose of life, which is service to God:"

In recogninig their own responsibility, parents develop in the child a sense of his duties and obligations, as well as rights and privileges, the bishops declared.

"No point is urged with greater insistency by religion than the accountability of each individual before God."

And in this connection, the child "should be held to strict account for the performance of chores and tasks which are given to him by his parents.

"From the consciousness that even the smallest household task when faithfully carried out draws him closer to God, the child will derive a continuing motivation for relating all that he does to God."

Thus the "continuance and well-being of a state based on democratic principles require that it show a lively concern for moral principles and practices which are firmly grounded only in religion."

The problem of juvenile delinquency was treated in some detail by the bishops, who noted that "many unsalutary influences are at work in modern society which must not be allowed free play upon the personality of the growing child."

Parents should not treat the child as an adult; they should "carefully regulate the company and the hours which the child keeps"; he should be warned against, "even forbidden," certain associations.

"Particularly during adolescence . . . a vigilant watch should be kept over the type of entertainment in which he indulges, the motion pictures he attends, the books he reads, the radio and television programs to which he is exposed in the home."

The combination of the child's sense of responsibility and the parents' surveillance of his behavior will make him "constantly aware that his time and his talents belong to God . . ." the bishops stated.

Thus "he will want to use them properly and will avoid those harmful associations and pastimes which frequently lead to juvenile delinquency."

This attitude implies, however, that adequate recreational facilities and opportunities for the development of his interest in hobbies games and other activities are available "so that his abounding energy can find wholesome channels for expression," the statement added.

The properly developed child will not only learn a sense of responsibility, but also "a sense of mission."

The keynote of the child's mission in the world, continued the bishop's declaration, is found in scripture: "I am come to do the will of Him who sent me."

Vocational Guidance Urged

To further this attitude, the bishops urged a vocational guidance program in which parents and teachers would unite to choose an occupation for which the child is fitted and in which he could best serve God.

"A deeper awareness of the child in his mission in life will do much to reduce the shocking waste of time and energy which in so many instances characterizes his formative years today."

The bishops underlined their belief that it is the primary right of parents and not the State, to educate their children — a "natural right . . . which has ever been recognized in our American traditions."

As recently as 1944, the statement recalled, the Supreme Court defined it this way:

"It is cardinal with us that the custody, care and nurture of the child reside first in the parents whose primary function and freedom include preparation for obligations the State can neither supply nor hinder."

Church Ready to Help

The Catholic Church "stands ready at hand with all their material and spiritual resources" to help parents exercise this right," the declaration said.

"At infancy she initiates the child into the life of grace, and for the rest of his days she stands by his side ready to minister to his needs.

"She recognizes his pre-eminent need for God and she meets it by providing Catholic schools for each stage of his educational development.

"She does this in virtue of the sublime teaching office conferred upon her by Jesus Christ."

The bishop's statement was signed by Dennis Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia, Edward Cardinal Mooney of Detroit, Samuel Cardinal Stritch of Chicago, Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York, Francis P. Keough, archbishop of Baltimore; Robert E. Lucey, archbishop of San Antonio; Richard J. Cushing, archbishop of Boston; Joseph E. Ritter, archbishop of St. Louis; Patrick A. O'Boyle, archbishop of Washington; John M. Gannon, bishop of Erie; John F. Noll, bishop of Fort Wayne; Emmet M. Walsh, coadjutor bishop of Youngstown, and Michael J. Ready, bishop of Columbus.

Crime Probe Hears Tijuana Mafia Talk Linked to Killings

1950, slaying of Charles Binaggio, Kansas City northside Democratic boss, and his strongarm man, Charles Gargotta, an ex-convict and known as a merciless enforcer of Binaggio's political decisions. The two were slain in Binaggio's political club rooms.

"We are extremely interested in why those Mafia and narcotics figures concentrated in Tiajuana at this particular time," Kefauver said, but declined to elaborate. "We will let the facts speak for themselves."

A Kansas City Federal grand jury reported that both Gargotta and Binaggio were about to be indicted for gambling operations that totaled $34,500,000 a year. The jurors said that both had broken the code of the underworld and revealed who their wire and other gambling enterprises.

Bompensiero told the crime probers that he once was a Milwaukee laborer but came to San Diego many years ago for fishing. He said that while there he became involved in gambling and other illegal enterprises. He said his partners in the Gold Rail Cafe in San Diego are Frank and Louie Dragna, son and nephew respectively of Jack Dragna. Bompensiero told the Senators he was a long-time friend of Jack Dragna, reputed West Coast Mafia leader and underworld rival of Gambler Mickey Cohen.

A recommendation to remove the gag rule which prevents Federal income tax agents from reporting crime violations to local authorities was heard today by the Crime Committee.

The committee, after trying without much luck to pry income information out of Cohen, questioned Donald O. Bircher, a retitred intelligence unit man of the Bureau of Internal Revenue who made tax investigations of several underworld figures.

After testifying at the closed session, Bircher told reporters that before retiring as a group chief of the intelligence unit last August 31, he had investigated, among others, Bugsy Siegel, a gang leader slain in Beverly Hills, and Tony Cornero Stralla, former operator of gambling ships off Southern California.

Bircher said he told the committee that changes in the income tax laws should be made so that Federal agents could inform local law enforcement officers of violations. He cited, as an example, the fact that if a tax agent finds a druggist is peddling narcotics he cannot report it.

The former Federal officer also recommended a law to require a disallowance of income tax deductions because of any illegal activity.

Another witness questioned today was James Utley, described by the California crime commission as a man of "increasing importance in the California underworld."

It was apparent that Utley and Cohen are not exactly on speaking terms. A reporter asked Utley if he had ever had business dealings with Cohen. Utley took a nickel out of his pocket and said, "I've never had that much business dealings with Cohen. In fact, my conversations with Cohen have been very, very brief."

The committee, critical of the sheriff's office in connection with handling of the Guarantee Finance Co. case, also questioned Sheriff's Capt. Al Guasti.

Ratio of Crime News Sent Abroad Is Small

ATLANTA, Nov. 18 (AP).—About 500 newspaper executives wound up four days of lively shop talk today and then relaxed at a football game.

The final session of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association discussed whether AP news abroad gives a fair picture of life in the United States.

To questions whether crime news was not overemphasized the AP gave actual statistics from two sample days' news showing that crime news was a very small portion of the total sent abroad.

The resolutions committee of the managing editors commended the AP staff in Korea for a "great example" of accuracy and good reporting and "patriotic service."

The editors have analyzed all phases of AP service—and their contributions to it—to see how both can be improved.

They attended the Georgia Tech-Alabama football game this afternoon as guests of the Atlanta Journal.

The convention of editors today rejected charges that some AP news stories have reflected left-wing bias.

The convention indorsed, without dissent, a resolution by its board of directors, expressing confidence the AP "serves no party, politician, or dieology. It strives always to be objective, impartial, and factual; it succeeds in this endeavor so consistently that this board wishes o convey to the staff and management its congratulations."

Charges of left-wing bias were made at the convention by Charles A. Hazen, managng editor of the Shreveport, La., Times.

Robert Early of the Indianapolis, Ind., Star moved that an unbiasted committee be appointed to investigate further Hazen's charge.

James S. Pope of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Vincent Jones of the Gannett Newspapers, Rochester, N. Y., and Norman Isaacs of the St. Louis Star-Times said Hazen's charges already had been investigated fully by the directors and by study committees.

Early's motion failed for a lack of a second. It first was seconded by Louis Harris of the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle but later Harris withdrew his second, explaining he desired only to facilitate discussion.

Then a second motion was adopted making the directors' resolution the resolution of the full convention.

Westminster Talk

M'Grath Sees Red Threat To Colleges

WESTMINSTER, Md., Nov. 18 (AP).—America's colleges and universities face a real and ever-present danger from Communism, Attorney General J. Howard McGrath told Western Maryland College alumni today.

McGrath was the principal speaker at the college's mid-century homecoming celebration, which also was highlighted by completion of plans for a $1,500,000 fund-raising drive.

The Attorney General spoke in place of Vice President Alben Barkley, who sent a letter of regret that upon advice of his physician he found it necessary to cancel the engagement.

Said McGrath: "We must realize that whatever conflict exists today, is not primarily between Russia and the United States, or between East and West, or between communism and capitalism. It is far deeper than that.

"Whatever conflict exists . . . is a conflict between two totally different philosophies of government. . . . One believes that man's problems can only be solved from the top down; the other believes that most problems can best be solved from the bottom up."

President J. Lowell Ensor outlined to the visiting Western Maryland alumni the program for the endowment drive, mainly among Methodists, to increase the facilities of the 82-year-old college.

Review Denies Catholics Beat Sen. Tydings

Those who attribute the defeat of Senator Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) to the opposition of Maryland Catholics have the "easy answer," but it is "also the wrong one," says the weekly Catholic Review in its current issue.

In an editorial taking issue with such a conclusion, drawn "with its usual assurance" by Time magazine, the Review sets forth four points to back its claim.

The newspaper, official organ of the archdiocese of Washington, also delves into the relationship of Senator Joseph McCarthy's anti-Communist campaign with that of the victorious Maryland Republican candidate, John Marshall Butler.

"Catholic dissatisfaction" with Tydings is the wrong answer, says the Review, because:

1. The Butler plurality in Baltimore fails to reflect the numerical strength of Catholics either in the city as a whole or in its more Catholic districts.

2. It does not explain the vote of Eastern Shore counties, where Catholics are "of negligible numbers and influence, and where Senator Tydings has hitherto been a favorite son."

3. Heavily Catholic St. Mary's County produced less opposition than Carroll, Prince Georges, Anne Arundel and Garret Counties, where "Catholics are relatively few."

4. "The common denominator" of Montgomery and Prince Georges, Democratic strongholds that went heavily against the Eenator, "is not religion and especially not Catholicism, but proximity to Washington where thousands of their citizens are employed."

Those who believe that Catholic opposition defeated Tydings have arrived at an "easy answer," the Review article says, "because features of the campaign made it look like the Senator himself considered Catholic opinion as his chief obstacle.

This idea was prompted by a belief that Catholics "as a whole were in sympathy with Senator McCarthy, possibly because he was a co-religionist, and were consequently out to get his adversary's hide."

"Just for the record," the editorial adds, "there were plenty of Catholics who had little sympathy or trust for Senator McCarthy."

Only some "unusual and weighty departure" can explain the upset of Tydings observes the Review. And that was the conduct of the Tydings Committee's loyalty investigation, which many Catholics believe he handled in a "summary and inconclusive way" so as to make it appear as a "political whitewashing."

Red Cross Giving $300,000 More To Korean Relief

The American Red Cross announced yesterday it is turning over an additional $300,000 for Korean relief and sending out two medical teams.

A previous $100,000 grant to help Korean civilians was made November 1, the Red Cross said, but it soon was spent on supplies.

Half of the $300,00 allocation was contributed by the Junior Red Cross National Children's Fund to buy clothing for destitute Korean youngsters The rest will buy textiles to be made int oclothing by Japanese Red Cross volunteers.

How It Works: Post's Ad Solicitors Get a Lesson

The Washington Post

THIS WAY—Mrs. Pauline Schneider (kneeling), telephone instructor, teaches classified advertising solicitors of The Washington Post how to use the monitoring board in the Post's new building. Mrs. Carol Simons (left), supervisor of the 24-girl telephone staff, will operate the board and can monitor calls on any one of the 24 lines coming into the telephone room. Others (standing, from left) are George Marshall, telephone company service foreman; H. H. Council, supervising foreman, and Mildred Herbert, a Post telephone solicitor approximately 150 miles of wire and inside cable were required for the 250 dial telephones in the new seven-story building. The local telephone company men have been on almost around-the-clock work schedules lately completing the phone installations.

Mrs. Carol Simons, chief supervisor of the classified telephone department, surveyed the new quarters and general equipment yesterday and said: "This new set-up will make all the difference in the world in the kind of service the public will receive."

Previously, each telephone ad solicitor sometimes had to handle 20 lines. Now each girl will have only four lines.

McKeldin's Official Lead Is 92,988

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18 (AP).—Theodore R. McKeldin, Republican, was elected Governor of Maryland by the precedent-shattering margin of 92,988 votes, a compilation of official counts showed today.

The official tally from the State was completed when Baltimore City ended its canvass this morning.

The tabulation shows that McKeldin received 369,790 votes in the November 7 election and Governor William Preston Lane, jr., got 276,792.

John Marshall Butler, the Baltimore Republican who unseated veteran Senator Millard E. Tydings, won his office by a 43,028-vote margin. The tally was 326,286 for Butler and 283,258 for Tydings.

Attorney General Hall Hammond, a Democrat, who came through as the only Democratic contestant on a State-wide basis, defeated William Gunter of Cumberland, 298,966 to 253,079.

Comptroller J. Millard Tawes, Democrat, was elected without opposition.

Maryland voters provided a lopsided tally in favor of calling a constitutional convention to amend the State's basic law. There were 200,287 in favor of the convention and 80,235 against.

The Ober anti-subversive law got a solid vote of confidence with 247,999 voting to keep it on the books and 76,257 against.

The final official figures in the six Congressional contests came up as follows:

First District: Representative Edward T. Miller (R), 36,005; Thomas Johnson (D.), 27,095.

Second District: James P. S. Devereux (R.), 99,473; Rep. William P. Bolton (D.), 96,475.

Third: Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D.), 27,646; Louis Milio (R.), 14,430.

Fourth: Repreesntative George H. Fallon (D.), 34,769; James Miller (R.), 25,287.

Fifth: Rep. Lansdale Sasscer (D.), 54,152; Tom Carr (R.), 40,031.

Sixth: Representative J. Glenn Beall (R.), 70,720; Russell P. Hartle (D.), 43,542.

Baltimore City's official tally showed that voters rejected a dog amendment to the city charter aimed at preventing use of animals for medical research.

WHEN we have reached total sales of $5,000, all sets will revert to regular retail prices (that's the only way we stay in business). Chest Drive Leader Sure District Will Meet Quota

Campaign Enters Sixth Week With 68% Raised; Total Now $2,929,695

Hugh K. Duffield, general chairman of the 1951 Community Chest campaign, said yesterday the $4,260,000 area quota "would surely be reached" if "step-by-step objectives" are achieved.

As the campaign entered its sixth week with 68 percent collected or pledged, he issued a "brief forward-looking analysis," a pattern for ultimate success.

With approximately 15,000 new donors and $171,590 reported last Friday, the total now stands at 270,000 contributors and $2,929,695.

Unit leaders and workers are confident of passing the three-million-dollar mark, at the next luncheon Tuesday at the Washington Hotel.

Their next objective is to reach $3,557,000—the amount raised last year—by November 28. This achievement is within a reasonable possibility, Chairman Duffield pointed out, because there are still some 80,000 donors in 1949 to be heard from in the current drive.

The Campaign Committee is confident that the Washington area, with its 1,450,000 population, must include another 100,000 potential donors who had no part in the 1950 campaign. Many have come to Washington since the invasion of South Korea last June.

The last lap of the campaign calls for "more training, more stamina, and more coordination because it is the hardest," according to a Government unit bulletin mailed workers yesterday by Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman, chairman of the unit.

Government holds top place in collections with 81.4 percent or $1,371,177, or a $1,682,700 goal.

Fairfax County is second with 66.7 percent or $27,160 of a $39,500 quota.

The Special Solicitation Unit is third with 65.6 percent or $204,332 of $311,500 goal.

Business-Employes I, under Chairman John S. Hayes, reports 63.41 percent, or $1,051,925, of a $1,658,800 objective.

AAA Studies Value of Car Inspections

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

The American Automobile Association has started a full-scale study of the need for compulsory car inspections, and whether inspections should be by Government stations or by private garages under Government supervision.

The decision to launch the study was made at the association's annual convention in New York City last month after a lengthy debate on the pros and cons of inspection.

During the discussion G. Wise Wescott, general manager of the Automobile Club of Virginia, challenged the AAA's 17-year-old policy of favoring such inspections. He said Virginia inspections had not "accomplished what they are intended to do."

More Accidents in Virginia

He told the New York meeting the Virginia accident rate per 100 million miles of travel was 8.9, while the national average was only 7. He favored "continuing inspection by all police authorities at all times, and every car involved in an accident should be inspected immediately to see if there was any defect which caused that accident."

The association designated Laverne Johnson and a technical staff of traffic engineers and safety men to make a detailed study of the overall question and report back to next year's convention.

This will include a field study, information on inspection charges, efficiency of inspectors, items listed for inspection and the resulting attitude of drivers, Burton W. Marsh of the association said yesterday.

Tour Shows Inconsistencies

Last week The Washington Post took a car through the District-operated inspection system and then through three Virginia garages which make inspections under supervision of the State police.

The result was four different lists of complaints. When one Virginia garage remedied the deficiencies and awarded the vehicle an "Approved" sticker, the next one visited declared the car was still deficient and charged again for the same work.

Government Stations Called Best

The Committee on Motor Vehicle Administration of the President's Highway Safety Conference of 1949 reported on this:

"State - Owned - and - Operated Stations—In general, stations operated under this type of legislation are doing the best job. In those instances where the job is not being well done, three main reasons for failure are apparent:

"(1) Failure to receive a fair share of revenues to perform the service for which its fees are collected; (2) salary scales inadequate to attract and hold personnel of the desired qualifications, and (3) lack of sufficient personnel.

"States Operating Under State-Appointed Systems—Under this system, whereby the State licenses garages, the quality varies with the degree of enforcement the State is able to exercise. In some cases, enforcement is difficult to obtain, while in other cases lax enforcement or no enforcement exists.

Civil Defense Warden Plan Is Revamped

Service Divided By Neighborhoods In Six Meetings

Defense-minded Washington citizens last night brought the city's civil defense warden service to the neighborhood level by breaking down the six warden divisions into a tentative 52 areas.

Approximately 170 representatives of business, citizen, civic and other organizations, met with warden service leaders in six locations around the city.

Each of the six groups broke down the individual divisions into areas, and nominated a leader for each.

Chief Warden Max C. Schwartz said he would pick the area wardens from the list of those nominated. Breakdown of the divisions into smaller areas also will be subject to final approval by Civil Defense leaders.

By Police Precincts

The groups were told that each warden division is composed of several police precincts instead of citizens association territories as in World War II.

The warden leaders conducting the meetings stressed, however, that the city's warden service is not managed by the police, but through warden headquarters at Force School, 1740 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Conducting the six meetings were the following warden leaders: William Armstrong, Harry C. Weshler, Cecil Clem, Capt. Harry Dengler, USA, Harry M. Stull, and W. L. Smith.

Six Divisions

The six divisions are: Division A—composed of Police Precincts 1, 3 and 4; Division B—Police Precincts 2, 10 and 13; Division C—Police Precincts 5 and 9; Division D—Police Precincts 6 and 12; Division E—Police Precincts 7 and 8; Division F—Police Precincts 11 and 14.

Chief Warden Schwartz yesterday named two former World War II assistant chief wardens to the same posts in the present Civil Defense setup. They are Dr. Isaac Cupid and Harry C. Weshler.

Polish-American Congress Asks U.S. Policy Revision

Resolutions adopted at the last session of the Supreme Council of the Polish-American Congress yesterday appealed "to our Government to revise its position regarding Poland's western boundaries."

More than 250 delegates and guests from 34 State chapters met in a two-day convention at the Raleigh Hotel.

They appealed for "recognition of the Oder and Niesse Rivers as Poland's boundaries in the west, and the boundary of 1939 as that of the east."

Hugo Carusi, chairman of the Displaced Persons Commission here, and Herve L'Hereux, chief of the visa division of the Department of State, were guest speakers.

Wife Wounded

Shooting Suspect Surrenders

LEONARDTOWN, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—A southern Maryland farmer, hunted for the attempted slaying of his wife, surrendered today to Maryland State police after hiding in a swamp for a week, with little food.

The farmer, Raymond Hayden, 41, is accused of shooting his wife, Nellie, 40, in the back with a shotgun on their farm near Mechanicsville in St. Marys County, November 11.

Mrs. Hayden, whose lungs were punctured by the shots, was reported in fair condition at St. Mary's Hospital in Leonardtown. The Haydens have eight children, ranging from three to 12 years old.

Hayden fled immediately after the shooting, police said. He was the object of a constant search by State police, who last Tuesday formed a posse to hunt for him.

Yesterday a friend of Hayden's telephoned Detective Sergt. Murray E. Jackson at Leonardtown and said Hayden was ready to surrender. Hayden appeared with the friend at Jackson's home at 5 p. m.

He told police he hid in the swamp near Trent Hall Farm during the entire week. He said he sat on a log with his feet in the water during the day and moved up to high ground where he made a bed of leaves at night.

Hayden said he had only a bag of kale and a couple of persimmons to eat during the week.

He was committed to St. Marys County Jail. A date for the hearing has not been set.

Woman Wounded In 'Skyline' Attack In Fair Condition

Mrs. Florence Danton, severely injured when her husband attacked her and fatally wounded their four-year-old daughter on Skyline drive Thursday, was reported in "fair" condition at Front Royal (Va.) Memorial Hospital last night.

Hospital authorities said she was conscious most of the day and showed "some improvement" over her condition of the previous day. She has not been informed of the death of her daughter, Lynn Frances, apparently killed instantly in the attack.

Mrs. Danton's husband, Andrew, a former Census Bureau employe who lives at 3650 39th st. nw., has been charged with murder

Sesqui Plans to Place Plaques On Historic Buildings, Homes

The National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission is planning to mark historic buildings and homes in Washington with plaques, it was announced yesterday.

The subjects will be selected by the commission's committee on historic sites and buildings, with the approval of the executive committee for the Sesquicentennial. Dr. H. P. Caemmerer heads the group. F. Regis Noel is vice chairman and Mrs. Doris B. Reed secretary.

Meanwhile, the commission reminded residents of Greater Washington that its contest to select the one event in Washington's 150-year history which has contributed most to the progress of the United States as a bulwark of freedom will close at midnight Wednesday. Entries, not to exceed 100 words, can be mailed to the National Capital Sesquicentennial Freedom Contest, Room 1205, 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Blood Donor Appeal Made By Red Cross

With a shipment of blood sent last week to Korea and the constant civilian requests for blood, the Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Center needs many more blood donors.

The shipment followed renewed demands by the military for blood, Thomas H. Evans, the center's administrator, said yesterday. The center, at 1730 E st. nw., has recently undergone expansion to accommodate more donors.

Last week the center also distributed 697 points of blood to hospitals in the District and to communities in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia covered by the Bloodmobile.

Three visits are scheduled by the Bloodmobile this week: On Monday, St. Thomas More Church, Glebe rd. and Lee blvd., Arlington, from 12 noon to 6 p. m.; on Tuesday, U. S. O. Building, Fredericksburg, Va., from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., and on Friday, the Pentagon Building, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.

Man Mowing Lawn Cuts Off Tip of Finger

A man who got too close to his work amputated the tip of a finger while mowing his lawn and an imitative 18-month-old girl drank a bottle of beer without her parents' permission.

These were two of the 88 home mishaps reported last week by the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service.

Another infant drank cleaning fluid while a five-year-old boy ate some drain cleaner. One child fell on a pair of scissors, puncturing her throat near the windpipe and a boy fell on a stick, jabbing it through his cheek and soft palate.

Four elderly persons died in falls and two persons suffocated, one an infant in his crib. Two persons had bugs removed from their ears.

So far this year there have been 178 accidental deaths in District homes, the Red Cross reported, compared to 202 for the same period in 1949. Local hospitals have treated 5389 home injuries during 1950, slightly less than the 5507 reported for the same period last year.

Testament Reading Held

the language of signs last night for listeners who are deaf.

Seven persons plus three readers plus Foundry's sexton plus Elgin Groseclose, economic consultant and spearhead of the project, were on hand in the dark hours yesterday morning when H. W. Fisher, jr., Georgetown grocer, opened the King James version and began reading from the Gospel according to Saint Matthew, Chapter 1, Verse 1:

"The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham."

Walter Keim, Labor Department official, was due to finish the reading last night with the words from the Revelation of St. John the Divine, Chapter 22, Verse 21:

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

Only a handful of persons was present for the readings during the day, usually no more than 25 or so at any given time.

But one got up at 4 a. m. to be there from the start and planned to be there at the finish last night. She was Nell Turner, of 1510 Park rd. nw., a Labor Department clerk.

"I'm going to stay right through if I can," she said. "This is a chance to hear the entire history of the New Testament in one day."

The variety of trades and professions contributing readers was typified by the eight persons who read the Gospel According to St. John.

St. John was read from successively by Mrs. John A. Patterson, jr., housewife; Pvt. William J. Couperthwaite, policeman; Miss Margaret Ringrose, Government worker; Thornton Owen, real estate man; Herbert B. Elliston, newspaperman; Ralph B. Kennard, scientist; Nathan Bushnell, jr., insurance man, and R. R. Zimmerman, of the ECA.

Norman J. O. Makin, Australian ambassador here, read the Third Epistle of John and the General Epistle of Jude last night; Jess Larson, General Services Administration chief, the first six chapters of Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, and Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, the last three chapters.

Rev. C. C. Hung, pastor of the Chinese Community Church, and Frances Chin, petite, 23-year-old member of the church, read chapters from the Acts of the Apostles.

Dr. Crane to Speak

Dr. Darrell Crane, president of the Washington chapter of the National Arthritis Foundation, will address the Democratic Club of the District of Columbia, at 12:30 p. m. today in the Dupont-Plaza Hotel.

D. C. Personal Income Taxes Top 1949 Take

Final figures show the District individual income tax produced $5,075,000 in fiscal 1950—$350,000 more than the city received from it the previous year.

C. A. Beard, jr., head of the Income and Franchise Tax Division, also reported that unincorporated business income tax collections jumped from $654,000 to $1,287,000 last year, while receipts from corporation franchise taxes fell off from $5,953,000 in fiscal 1949 to $5,763,000 last year.

Changes in tax laws probably account for the change in figures for the latter two taxes, Beard said. But he attributed the gain in individual income taxes chiefly to a new regulation that required employers to report to the city salaries paid to District residents This practice will be continued next year, Beard said, but the minimum salary on which taxe must be paid (and employers' reports made) has been increase from $1000 to $4000.

Beard attributed the jump in collections from unincorporated businesses to tax law changes that reduced exemptions from $10,000 to $5000 and put a 20 percent limit on the amount of net income that could be declared as officers' salaries.

The drop in corporation taxes was probably also due to confusion and contention over a change in the law that brought some new corporations under its provisions and excluded others formerly taxed, Beach said. His office estimated corporations owe the District some $320,000 in taxes which they were unaware of or are fighting in court.

Arlington Asks Regional Help On Pollution

Calls On Neighbors To Join in Study of Sewage Problems

The Arlington County Board yesterday called on other nearby Virginia communities to join with it in formation of an "interim" committee to study sewage and water problems on a regional basis.

In a resolution proposed by Board Member Robert W. Cox, the board suggested the committee investigate the "significant economies" which might be effected through creation of a regional water supply and sewage authority.

It asked the cooperation of the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church and Fairfax County in setting up the committee and called for a report within one month after its formation.

The resolution said results of a referendum, in which Arlington residents voted overwhelmingly for a $2,600,000 bond issue to improve sewage disposal facilities, constituted "a mandate for expeditious and efficient action with respect to sewage disposal."

After approving the resolution unanimously, the board designated Cox as its representative on the committee and appointed B. Alden Lilywhite to represent the county planning commission.

The board also voted to appeal a November 10 verdict of an Interstate Commerce Commission rate division, approving a five-cent increase on interstate bus fares charged by the Alexandria, Barcroft and Washington Transit Co. The new fares became effective last Monday.

Malcolm Miller, the board's counsel in the fight against the rate boost, said an appeal would be carried to the full 11-member commission. The rate division that approved the increase was composed of only three commissioners, one of whom sided with the county, he pointed out.

The board gave unanimous approval to a reassessment ordinance providing for a full-time real estate tax assessor and a board of review to act on appeals from property owners dissatisfied with the assessor's rulings. The measure, under consideration for about two months, will become effective January 1.

The new ordinance, members of the board said, will provide a "constant" reassessment of real estate values instead of quadrennial assessments now provided by State law.

County Manager A. T. Lundberg was authorized to offer the Home and Finance Agency the sum of $30,000 for the war-built Arlington Health Center, still owned by the Government. An earlier offer of $20,000 was rejected by the Federal agency, which indicated the $30,000 sum would be "acceptable" and could be paid at the rate of $7500 a year for four years.

The board also approved an appropriation of $450 for purchase of a "drunkometer" — a scientific device to determine degree of intoxication. The action was spurred by requests from Arlington County Court Judge Hugh Reid, who has frequently dismissed charges of drunkenness against Police Court prisoners because of insufficient evidence.

He was released under $300 bond on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, and his case was continued in Municipal Court to December 12.

Palogos has admitted taking the money from Philip J. Eliades, 416 5th st., nw., police said. He even gave Eliades a receipt for the money, signed Robert George Palogos, State Department agent, police said. Palogos, 31, lives at 816 Gist ave., Silver Spring, Md.

Realty Tax Cut Proposed In Alexandria 1951 Budget

15-Cent Decrease In Offing; Cigarette Tax Would Be Kept; Record Total Asked

By William H. Smith
Post Reporter

Alexandria's real estate tax rate goes down 15 cents and the cigarette tax stays in force under the city's all-time record budget proposed for 1951 and released yesterday.

Prepared by City Manager W. Guy Ancell, the tentative budget has been submitted to members of the City Council for study, after which it will be advertised for public hearing no later than December 1.

Despite the fact that it calls for an all-time record appropriation of $4,981,322, the budget contemplates a real estate levy of $2.60, as against the current rate of $2.75. The reduction nothwithstanding, the levy is expected to yield $2,106,000 in the new calendar year—an increase of $16,000 over current real estate tax receipts.

Out of Red

Primarily responsible for the proposed tax reduction, according to Ancell, is a surplus of $514,622 from current receipts. This is in sharp contrast to the picture a year ago, when the city entered its fiscal year with a deficit of approximately $119,000.

A major factor in the surplus was an unexpected State contribution of $248,150 toward "emergency" school construction. Because the city's school board was able to certify that no school emergency existed, it was authorized to divert the money to the city.

Also contributing to the surplus were (1) collections of real estate and personal property taxes far in excess of original budget estimates, (2) a 2-cent-per-pack cigarette tax that has netted more than $75,000 since its adoption last June and (3) an underexpenditure of about $85,000 for capital improvements.

Cigarette Tax to Stay

The new budget proposes retention of the cigarette tax despite the surplus, and despite the fact that it was adopted in midyear as an "emergency" measure to help offset an apparent budget deficit. Ancell estimates it will bring the city $150,000 for the next 12 months.

No new taxes are proposed in the budget.

Among expenditures responsible for a budget increase of about $700,000 for the new year is an outlay of $611,000 for capital improvements, Ancell pointed out. Most of the improvements have been recommended by the city planning commission as part of a recently-outlined five-year improvement plan.

The proposed improvements include a $225,000 two-ton incinerator; a $75,000 swiming pool for Negroes; new court rooms and a law library costing $55,000; a $75,000 city garage and repair shop; miscellaneous storm drains costing $25,000, and purchase and improvement of downtown parking areas at an estimated cost of $25,000.

Salary Boosts

The budget would provide an increase of 5 percent in the salaries of most municipal employes, Ancell said in his budget message to the councilmen.

As usual, the largest individual item in the budget is the appropriation for public schools. The proposed 1951 figure is $1,212,515, in comparison with the current year's allocation of $1,088,492.

Other major expenditures include $335,892 for the police department, $304,306 for public welfare, $237,000 for new construction, $22,995 for the fire department and $102,117 for recreation. The budget also calls for an outlay of $569,338 for debt service on bond issues floated for previous public works projects.

The budget would provide the means for establishment of one new municipal department—a department of finance authorized in a new city charter approved by the State legislature early this year. It would be headed by a director of finance at an annual salary of $6600.

2.16 Percent Boost Granted SW Apartments

A 2.16 percent rent increase for 220 units of the Nichols Heights Apartments in Southwest Washington was recommended yesterday by District Rent Control Examiner James G. Tyson.

Unless a petition for review of his decision is filed with the District rent control administrator by November 27, monthly rents on the one-bedroom apartments will be raised from $64 to $65.75. The owners had asked for an increase of about $4 a month to compensate for the increase in operating costs since rents were last adjusted five years ago.

The apartments are located in the 4200 blocks of Nichols ave. sw., and S. Capitol st., the 4300 block of S. Capitol ter. sw., and the unit and 100 blocks of Danbury st. sw.

Novel Plan Averts Teamsters' Strike

A strike of AFL teamsters, scheduled to begin Monday morning against a Washington meat-packing concern, was called off yesterday to permit an unusual experiment in management-labor relations.

Local 639 has ben seeking a five-day week for the score of route drivers and commission men of Briggs & Co., 454 11th st. sw., and after long negotiations set a deadline for Monday.

Yesterday, the company and the local approved a novel peace plan which calls for setting up a five-man committee of union drivers to determine whether or not Briggs & Co. can put the drivers on a five-day week without a loss.

The company has contended that the 5½ and 6-day week is necessary to service its customers properly, and that a shorter work week will reduce sales.

According to Charles Bell, business agent of Local 639, the packing house has agreed to put the route drivers on a 5-day week if the union investigating committee asks for it, with the union then guaranteeing there will be no drop in business.

Meanwhile, the route drivers are to continue on the longer work week but will receive $5 bonus pay for working on Saturdays, the sixth day.

Pallbearers leave All Saints' Church after services yesterday for Carter Barron

Washington paid its last respects yesterday to one of its first citizens.

With Mrs. Truman representing the President's family, and more than 600 others in attendance, funeral services were held at All Saints' Episcopal Church for Carter T. Barron, 45-year-old theater executive and champion of community enterprises.

Mr. Barron, Eastern division manager of Loew's Theaters, died Thursday of cancer of the brain at his home, 6661 Barnaby st. nw. Burial will be in West View Cemetery at Atlanta, Ga., where he attended Georgia School of Technology.

As the rear of the church at Chevy Chase Circle was packed with standing mourners yesterday, the front was banked with floral offerings from friends and associates of the Georgia-born figure who devoted much of the last 18 years of his life to helping others.

Conducted by Canon Lucas

The ceremony was conducted by Canon Albert Lucas, archdeacon of the Episcopal diocese of Maryland, and the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Lowry, rector of the All Saints' Parsh, assisted by the Rev. Charles H. Best, associate rector. Dr. Lucas, a close friend of the Barron family, is former headmaster of St. Alban's School, now attended by Carter T. Barron, jr.

A procession of more than 50 honorary pallbears preceded the coffin, which was covered with red roses and smilax.

Among these attending the funeral besides Mrs. Truman were Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, District Court Judge Richmond B. Keech, Presidential Secretaries Matthew J. Connelly, Charles G. Ross and William D. Hassett, Senate Secretary Leslie Biffle and District Commissioner John Russell Young.

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loews, Inc., and managers of theaters in the Eastern area also were present.

After reciting the Thirty-ninth Psalm from the Book of Common Prayer Dr. Lowry intoned the verses of the One hundred thirieth Psalm, De Profundis:

"Out of the deep have I called unto thee, O Lord; Lord, hear my voice. . . ."

Following a verse from the first Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, there came from the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel of St. John:

"I got to prepare a place for you . . . whither I go, ye go."

After Canon Lucas had recited a series of prayers, the funeral procession, led by a cross-bearer and two candle-bearers, passed slowly down the aisle and out of the church.

Gasoline in Quantity Produced From Coal

LOUISIANA, Mo., Nov. 18 (AP). First production of gasoline from coal "in practical quantities" in the United States was disclosed today by the Government's Bureau of Mines.

More than 225,000 gallons already have been produced here at the bureau's 25 million dollar coal-to-oil demonstration plant on the Mississippi River about 100 miles north of St. Louis.

The "proving ground" was established to test the feasibility of establishing a synthetic oil industry in this country, operated by private industry, to meet the challenge of lessening reserves of natural petroleum, bureau scientists said.

Production of gasoline in the test plant has been proceeding at rates up to 9000 gallons a day for the past month, the Associated Press learned.

Bureau scientists say the plant can also produce diesel oil, jet fuel and various other chemicals with applications in such materials as antifreeze products, paint solvents, wood preservatives and even nylon stockings.

Dr. Leslie L. Hirst, chief of the bureau's coal-to-oil plant, said operations already have proved the feasibility of the process from an engineering standpoint.

He added that preliminary estimates are that production costs will be "not much higher" than for producing gasoline from natural petroleum.

Hirst said plans are under way to test the new gasoline in motor vehicles, with 30,000 gallons a month being earmarked for that purpose.

The gasoline is made by "hydrogenation,' which means the addition of hydrogen to coal under high pressure and temperature. The coal is reduced to a semi-liquid state before the hydrogen is added. Then, in the presence of a catalyst to speed the reaction, the coal can be converted to gasoline and certain other products.

The bureau expects to begin production next spring by still another synthetic process, facilities for which are already completed. This will be a "gas synthesis" process, otherwise known as the Fischer-Tropsch process. In it, coal is first converted to a mixture of gases and then into gasoline and other products.

Both processes were originally developed by the Germans. The United States has instituted a number of engineering improvements, Hirst said

Over Grazing Land

Utah Fears Outbreak of Indian War

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 18 (U.P.). A renewal of Indian range wars similar to those of 50 years ago appeared possible today in an isolated section of southern Utah with a red man "invasion" of San Juan County sheep country.

A Bureau of Land Management official said their sheep have been streaming across the San Juan River into a plateau region that has been the exclusive domain of white settlers for 70 years.

The Land Management office said the range would be worthless for this winter within two or three weeks. Regional Bureau of Land Management Administrator H. Byron Mock said the situation could lead to open violence.

The attorney for the Navajos, Knox Patterson of Salt Lake City, denied the Indians were invading the white-owned territory. Patterson said the Navajos had been thrown off the land illegally, and that 100 Navajo families would return with 50,000 sheep to "reclaim" the land. Patterson said the Indians were moving on his orders.

"Someone May Get Hurt"

The area involved is in extreme southern Utah just north of the San Juan River, near the historic Natural Bridges National Monument.

Mock said, "I'm scared of what will happen. If all remedies fail and it appears the Government is impotent to protect those people's livelihood, someone is going to get hurt."

Stockmen of the area met Wednesday night to form the San Juan Stock Growers Association to combat the menace. They agreed to give attorneys three weeks to exhaust every possible remedy.

Bureau of Land Management Grazier Dee Black of San Juan County reported, though, that the land would be "completely wasted within another two or three weeks if the Indians are not immediately forced to return to their reservation."

Black said, "They have become so arrogant they would stand fingering their rifles and pistols and would either tear up trespass notices or burn them in their campfires."

Boundaries Defined in 1933

White settlers built up prosperous herds in the years following 1870 when the first colonizers were sent there by Mormon Church Leader Brigham Young.

Congress passed a law definitely determing boundaries in 1933, that settled the matter until 1947 when two Indian families with about 1500 sheep moved in and refused to get out.

This year, Federal Judge Willis W. Ritter refused to issue an injunction on the grounds that the Indians had "aboriginal rights."

Wilford L. Burton, attorney for the newly formed stock association, said since November 9 Indians started moving their herds en masse. At least 32 Navajo families are in the area with some 5000 head of sheep.

Mock said, "There is plenty of good grazing on their own reservation but Indian agents there control the size of the herds, to prevent over-grazing. When they get north into white man's country there is no herd control, and it looks like we can expect them to keep coming until something is done."

Youth Admits Burning Friend, 17, to Death

GRAND RIVER, Ohio, Nov. 18 (U.P.)—A 20-year-old youth was held today after breaking down and confessing he burned a 17-year-old friend to death because he had been "making dates for other men with my girl friend."

Victor Justinger admitted that he splashed gasoline over Thomas Eglestan as he lay stupefied from drink in a motor car, set fire to the auto, and then went to bed.

Irish Artists Win Bra-Girdle Round in Ad Censor Battle

DUBLIN, Nov. 18 (U.P.)—Ireland's commercial artists have won another round in their fight against tight censorship of newspaper ads.

A national daily finally has published an ad showing a woman in a bra and girdle.

Of course, the bra was not allowed to bulge and the girdle was half way down to the knees, but for Irish artists it was a victory.

The artist's sketch was passed because the woman's face was turned demurely from the reading public.

"Not fully clothed, perhaps," the editor said, approving the ad. "But she is demure. One can see she hopes no one is looking at her."

Generally Irish newspapers use only reproductions of feminine lingerie and not on feminine forms. Panties never, bras maybe, but they cannot bulge. Falsies are taboo, too.

All newspapers except one now allow ads showing sketches of women disrobed as far as their slips—provided, of course, that the slips don't bulge.

The other day one newspaper used a nylon stocking ad that had Ireland up in arms. The daring ad showed the stockings on the Dietrich-like legs of a Dublin model. And two inches above the knee! It was the first time a "live" model had been used for a woman's apparel advertisement.

Hundreds of indignant letters were written to the paper, and pro and con letters were published. The ad stayed in the paper.

Do 'War Nerves' Make Good Business?

In Washington, nerve center of the world, people are more susceptible to 'war nerves' than most. At Campbell's we think it highly significant that the darker the international outlook, the larger the demand for our AM-FM radio-phonograph receivers. Since the beginning of the Korean War, our sales of these instruments have kept pace with those of television receivers, in spite of the pre-tax rush for T-V sets in October's closing weeks.

People buy AM radios to hear many things, notably news. When they demand FM as well, it's safe to assume they are good music listeners, for FM does not distort the many good music programs broadcast daily. And obviously nobody purchases a relatively expensive phonograph combination simply to listen to be-bop records.

The fact is that more and more people realize that an evening of listening to good music, broadcast or recorded, is one of the few remaining ways to achieve the inner peace man must enjoy before he can successfully contend with a world in turmoil. Hence the demand for the infinitely superior records, receivers and reproducing instruments that have been developed since 1940.

Maybe this makes good business only for the Washington music merchant. But I believe that when the people who pull the strings of destiny begin looking to good music to help them to a calmer perspective, it's good business for all men, everywhere!

'Ain't Sayin' Nothin',' Slayer of 5 Mutters

VINELAND, N. J., Nov. 18 (AP).—A mild-looking stocky little man who slaughtered five of his estranged wife's relatives and wounded four other persons in a wild shooting spree last night was jailed on murder charges today.

"I ain't sayin' nothin'. I don't want to enter no plea," muttered 5-foot-7 Ernest Ingenito this morning when he was taken before a judge.

That was 10 hours after the 25-year-old appliance salesman and former GI stalked into his wife's father's house, a gun in each hand. He demanded to see his children.

"He wasn't allowed in," his wife said from a hospital bed today. "He seemed crazy. He said: 'You don't want me to see the kids. Here's what you're going to get.'"

Then Ingenito opened fire.

When the shooting spree stopped 20 minutes later, about 9:20 p. m., five members of his wife's family had been slain, three others wounded critically. Ingenito's wife, Teresa, 23, from whom he was separated, was wounded less seriously.

He had pursued his mother-in-law to a closet where she was hiding, yanked open the door and riddled her with bullets. He had shot down her uncle as he pursued him with a knife. He had critically wounded a 9-year-old niece.

Ingenito fled after the last killing and became the object of the greatest manhunt South Jersey has seen in many years.

State policemen armed with submachineguns caught him in his car and he surrendered meekly, saying:

"I'm the man you're looking for."

Mild Attempt at Suicide

He made a half-hearted attempt at suicide, cutting his left wrist several times with a razor. But his injuries were not serious.

It was the second mass slaughter in South Jersey in little more than a year. On September 6, 1949, another former GI, Howard Unruh, stalked River rd. in Camden dealing death to 13 persons, some of them unknown to him, in the worst street slaughter in history.

Ingenito, blue-eyed, brown-haired and weighing about 170 pounds, was a salesman. His relatives and his wife's are truck farmers.

Mother Cabrini Made Patron Saint For Emigrants

ROME, Nov. 18.—Pope Pius XII for the first time in the history of the Roman Catholic Church has appointed a former United States citizen a patron saint, Vatican officials said today.

The new patron saint is Mother Frances Xavier Crabini, a native of Italy who became a naturalized citizen of the United States and died in Chicago in 1917. Her body is venerated in a crystal casket in Washington Heights, New York City, in one of many schools maintained by the large international missionary order she founded.

Mother Cabrini in 1946, in a solemn ceremony in St. Peter's Basilica here in Rome, became the first citizen of the United States to be declared a saint by the Catholic Church.

Pope Pius, in a solemn brief, has proclaimed Mother Cabrini the patron Saint of all the world's emigrants, Vatican authorities said. As such she will be a special saint to whom emigrants will pray in the future for help in their journeys to new countries, the Rev. Ermenegildo Brugnola, chief of office of the Apostolic Briefs of the Vatican Secretariate of State, explained.

Justice Dept. Opposes Appeal Delay for 11 Reds

The Department of Justice yesterday protested to the Supreme Court a proposed delay in hearing an appeal of 11 top Communists recently convicted in New York of conspiring to overthrow the United States Government.

Oral argument on the appeal has been set for December 4, but the defendants have asked that it be postponed until January 22, 1951, to enable them to acquire the services of a British attorney now in London.

Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman said the motion was "but a continuation of propaganda and delaying tactics employed by the petitioners from the inception of the case."

Diseased Turkey Count Fouled in Official Confusion

DETROIT, Nov. 18 (AP).—The count of dangerously diseased turkeys—if any—on shelves of Detroit region markets was fouled up in official confusion today. Authorities warned, meanwhile, that diseased birds could cause death unless thoroughly cooked.

The owner of a quarantined turkey ranch in suburban Farmington denied that—as officials believed yesterday—5000 cholera-ridden turkeys had reached markets from his flocks.

Kenneth Bracy, assistant chief of enforcement for the Michigan Department of Agriculture, agred, saying, "practically all" of the farm's turkeys, living and slaughtered, had been accounted for.

But Assistant Prosecutor George Taylor said at Pontiac that his investigation indicated the farm had sold between 3000 and 5000 birds from its diseased flocks and that only 1900 to 2000 have been located and impounded.

Driver Ability Survey Shows Unemployed to Be the Worst

So you think you're a good driver, huh?

Well, if you are a housewife, you are a better driver than a truck driver and if you are a Government employe you are a better driver than a funeral director or undertaker.

At least, according to a survey prepared by the State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. of Bloomington, Ill. They checked more than 1,500,000 private passenger cars in 40 States and compiled a list of insurance loss ratios in 64 occupations even including unemployed.

The best accident risks in the country, they found, are county agents, farm demonstrators and extension workers. The worst are the unemployed.

Among the 64 rankings, here are some of the better to worse ones:

Aviators, third; government employes, 8th; educators, including teachers, eleventh; retired persons, 13th; city and county officials and inspectors, 14th; trainmen and bus drivers, 20th; funeral directors and undertakers, 22d; housewives, 23d; insurance and real estate agents, 25th; commissioned military personnel, 26th; law enforcement persons, 31st; medical, 32d; truck drivers, 36th; editors, reporters, and photographers, 40th; churchmen, 50th; legal profession, 51st; students, 60th; enlisted military personnel, 61st; traveling salesmen, 62d; amusement and recreation workers, 63d.

Uneasy Quiet Marks U. S. Phone Strike

An uneasy quiet marked the tenth day yesterday of the Nation-wide strike by CIO workers of Western Electric, who also have been conducting a "hit and run" campaign of picketing against other subsidiaries of the Bell Telephone System in 43 States.

Locally, there was no picketing at all yesterday by the 320 Western Electric strikers, who are members of the CIO Communications Workers of America.

A spokesman for the union said that the Western Electric strikers here also will refrain from picketing today, but Monday will continue setting up lines at various installations of Chesapeake & Potomac Co. and American Telephone & Telegraph Corp.

District CWA-CIO officials charge that the ATT office here locked out about 60 union employes on Thursday, after the workers had refused to declare they would show up for work regardless of any picket lines. Robert Maher, chairman of the union's AT&T unit here, said yesterday that eight of the men sent home yesterday reported to work on schedule without incident. Maher said the employes have been instructed by the union to keep showing up for work daily — so long as there is no picket line.

Lockout charges against AT&T have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board in other cities. The company maintains its action is not a lockout, but an action required in the precise scheduling of the daily workload.

Telephone service was reported back to normal in Cumberland, Md., yesterday after a brief period when "hit and run" picket lines slowed down C&P phone service to an "emergency" pace.

The key issues are wages and contract duration. The union demands a 15-cent hourly pay boost and a one-year contract. The company's best offer has been an 11½-cent boost and a two-year contract, adjustable for wages after 16 months.

'Simpler' TV Color Unit Announced

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 18 (AP)—The Audicon Television Research Corp. announced today it had developed a color television system that was simpler and cheaper than others thus far proposed.

The announcement said the system would fit in with black and white television so that its color broadcasts would be received in color on color tests and in black and white on present sets. It added there were no moving parts and the system could be used with present transmitting and receiving equipment without requiring additional tubes or circuits.

As explained by the company, the heart of the sysem is its special color filter consisting of alternating red, green and blue lines. One such filter is used in transmitting the picture and another is placed over the face of the picture tube of the receiver. If the receiving set is not equipped with such a filter, said company officials, then it shows an ordinary black and white image.

The filters, it was estimated, would cost $40 to $50. The company said they could be attached like antiglare filters to the viewing tubes of present sets, regardless of how big the screen, and built into new sets.

The announcement was made in a statement described as "an open leter to the Federal Communications Commission and to manufacturers of television sets." It offered to demonstrate the system before the FCC, which last month authorized color broadcasting and adopted the method developed by the Columbia Broadcasting System. The authorization has been held up by a temporary restraining order issued by Federal Court in Chicago.

Food Stores, Transport Set For That Day

Food stores and transportation officials are ready with plenty of turkey and extra travel accommodations for the rush they expect between now and Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, they said yesterday.

Birds of all sizes, colors and shapes have been moving into town for the past few days and will be sold at just about last year's prices, or a little lower, poultry men expect.

While actual turkey prices will not be announced until Monday, a spokesman for a large store chain said it looked like about 57 to 59 cents a pound for 8 to 12 pounders, New York dressed, 73 cents for the same size, ready for the pan, and 83 cents for smaller birds, 5 to 8 pounds, ready for the pan.

"Big Toms" of 24 pounds and up probably will run around 47 cents a pound, and Fred Kolker, head of the wholesale poultry division, Merchants and Manufacturers Association, gave his annual advice to thrifty householders to "buy a big Tom and split it with your neighbor."

Cranberries at about 15 cents a pound and chestnuts at 19 cents in the chain stores are also plentiful this year, along with other traditional fixin's.

Federal and District offices, banks, and stores will close on the holiday, while public and parochial school children will have the whole weekend off.

Leave requests from Government personnel are heavier than usual, according to reports, because of requirements that accumulated leaves must be used up by June 30.

A number of workers apparently are taking the week off, airline spokesmen figured after experiencing an unusual amount of outward-bound travel which began Friday and necessitated extra sections to New York and New England.

Union Station officials expect Thanksgiving travel to equal last year's, they said yesterday. The usual extra sections, mose of them to New York, will be put on.

Repaving Work On Ridge Rd. S.E. To Start Soon

Work will start within a month on a $150,000 four-month project to widen and repave Ridge rd. se. for nearly a mile from Minnesota ave. to G st.

District Highway Director J. N. Robertson said the street will be widened to four lanes and paved with concrete. The city plans eventually to continue the job an additional half mile to the intersection of Ridge rd. and Bowen rd., he said.

Robertson also announced that the widening and repaving of a half-mile L-shaped section of Benning rd. and Southern ave. at the District Line has been completed. It will be reopened to traffic Monday afternoon, he said.

Funds to rebuild the three-quarter mile portion of Benning rd. from the new construction northwest to E. Capitol st. have been requested in the 1952 budget.

New Junior High To Be Dedicated

The new Kelly Miller Junior High School, 49th st. and Washington pl. ne., will be dedicated in ceremonies Monday at 8 p. m. in the school auditorium. School officials and members of the Board of Education have been invited to attend.

Speakers will include Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, first assistant superintendent of schools; Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, former member of the Board of Education; the Rev. Hampton Gaskins, pastor of Liberty Baptist Church and president of Kelly Miller Parent-Teacher Association, and Bernard Chapman, president of the Northeast Boundary Citizens Association.

Legionnaires to See Redskin Game Movies

Department of Justice Post No. 41, American Legion, will hold its regular monthly meeting at the Legion Club, 2437 15th st. nw., Monday at 8:15 p. m.

Dick McCann, general manager of the Washington Redskins, will be present with members of the team. Motion pictures of past games will be shown.

Film to Illustrate Wildlife Talk Tuesday

"Wildlife of Marsh and Mountain," a color motion picture, will illustrate the lecture of Cleveland P. Grant on Tuesday, 8 p. m., the National Museum Auditorium, 10th st. and Constitution nw.

The lecture is sponsored by the District's Audubon Society. The public is invited.

Housing Official to Talk

Roland M. Sawyer, administrative officer of minority group housing, Federal Housing Administration, will be guest speaker at an open forum at St. Peter Claver Center, 1513 U st. n.w., at 8 p. m. Monday. He will discuss the problem of overcoming shortages in the housing of racial minorities.

Girl Who Wrote President Prays for GIs Over Radio

By Ech Burchette-The Washington Post
13-year-old Linda Keller prays for soldiers overseas

By James B. Graham
Post Reporter

A 13-year-old girl stood before a radio microphone yesterday and in simple language prayed to God to protect soldiers fighting overseas and to help in finding peace.

The girl, Linda Keller, received the opportunity to offer her prayer as a result of a post card she wrote to President Truman. In it, she suggested that all radio stations pause daily at noon and that listeners everywhere pray for the fighting soldiers.

Her note was referred to Rear Admiral S. W. Salisbury, chairman of the Armed Forces Chaplains Board. He replied that he was sending copies of her postcard to nearby radio stations. He wrote that he hoped they could see their way to carry out "such a devout and thoughtful program."

And so yesterday, Linda was invited by Program Director Ernie Tannen, of WGAY, to offer her own prayer over the air at noon.

In her clear, childish voice, Linda prayed:

"Oh dear Heavenly Father, please protect us and our boys overseas. We here and there are placing all our confidence in You and are sure that You will help us to find peace. We ask this in Thy name. Amen."

Linda later tried to explain what prompted her to write to the President:

"There have always been wars, and people just seem to talk about peace without really doing anything about bringing it about. I wanted to know what peace really is," she said.

She thinks peace can be obtained through prayer "because the Bible says all things can be accomplished through prayer."

Linda's mother, with whom she lives at 6311 Riggs Manor dr., Hyattsville, remembered Linda saying recently that one should never have cause to worry, because "if you worry, you don't believe in God."

A recording of Linda's recitation of her prayer was made by WGAY and will be presented daily at noon over the station's facilities, Tannen said

At least four other local stations had made plans for similar observances by last night. WRC will begin a special moment of prayer daily at noon Monday featuring the voices of service chaplains. WMAL plans to present, also beginning Monday, service chaplains and local ministers in brief prayers nightly at 11:30 p. m. Both WWDC and WEAM will observe a moment of silent prayer at noon each day beginning Monday. WMAL's observance will be at 1 p. m.

Church Rebukes Niemoeller

BERLIN, Nov. 18 (AP).—German Protestantism appealed to the rival governments of divided Germany today to obey "the will of the people" on the rearmament question.

The highest Protestant body in the country—the Council of the Evangelical Church — urged this course in a declaration which censured Pastor Martin Niemoeller and Federal Chancellor Konrad Adenauer for the public bickering over West Germany's defense.

"The council knows that community in faith does not include unity of political judgment," it said. "The question whether rearmament of any kind is unavoidable can have various answers, even in faith.

"We caution everybody who has responsibility in the East or in the West to act in this question with utmost seriousness of conscience and not to decide against the will of the people."

Niemoeller's supporters were comforted by this part of the declaration. The anti-Nazi pastor has repeatedly demanded new elections so West Germans can decide for themselves whether to take up arms under Allied sponsorship.

Chancellor Adenauer and U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy are reported agreed that, though the West German constitution bans military measures, it can and should be legally amended by the present government for the sake of European security.

The council expressed its regret for the "sharpness of Dr. Niemoller's utterances" on rearmament, but "recognized the seriousness and weight of his questioning."

It also said it regretted "the form of criticism made by the federal chancellor," who had accused Niemoller of "acting in an irresponsible way to the damage of the German people at home and abroad."

Stern's Lincolniana To National Library

5 Million Here

Six Billion Yule Seals Are Mailed

Six billion 1950 Christmas Seals have gone into the mails, ready for delivery Monday, the National Tuberculosis Association announced yesterday.

The D. C. Tuberculosis Association said more than five million seals will be distributed in Washington. Bruce Baird, president of the National Savings & Trust Company, is general chairman of the local campaign, proceeds from which will support the work of the District of Columbia association in the coming year. Of funds raised locally, 94 percent will be spent for tuberculosis control in Washington.

President Truman, in launching the Seal drive, said it has become a symbol of the people's fight to eradicate tuberculosis, and urged American people to support the Seal sale generously.

Gift of the outstanding Alfred Whital Stern collection of Lincolniana to the national library was announced yesterday by Librarian of Congress Luther H. Evans.

The librarian's announcement coincides with the opening today of a Lincoln exhibition, including items from the Stern collection, on the anniversary of Lincoln's classic address at Gettysburg four score and seven years ago.

Stern, a Chicagoan, has spent a quarter century in assembling the collection, which is considered by authorities to be the most extensive of its kind ever assembled by a private individual.

It comprises some 6000 volumes of Lincoln literature, together with paintings, photographs, medals, manuscripts and memorabilia.

Life Mask Included

Among the objects of interest in the collection are the bronze casts of Lincoln's hands and his life mask, made by the Sculptor Leonard W. Volk in 1860. They are among the 63 items from the Stern collection included in the exhibit opening at the library today.

Another treasure is the original of Lincoln's letter of January 26, 1863, to Gen. Joseph Hooker.

In the letter, perhaps the most remarkable ever written by a commander-in-chief to a commander in the field, Lincoln advises the general that he has placed him in command of the Army of the Potomac, but rebukes him for having politicked against his predecessor in command, Burnside.

Lincoln also tells Hooker that he has heard "of your recently saying that both the Army and the Government need a Dictator." But, Lincoln assures him, "The government will support you to the utmost of its ability," and concludes, "go forward, and give us victory."

To Arrive in Installments

Under the terms of Stern's gift, the collection will be transferred to Washington in installments, and for the time being he will retain possession of the letter for which he paid $15,000 at a 1941 Philadelphia auction. However, Stern is expected to arrive in Washington next Friday for a visit, bringing the letter with him for exhibit.

The Stern collection is especially rich in rare documents and pamphlets issued before Lincoln's emergency as a national figure. Among other materials is the Ben Perley Poore edition of "The Conspiracy Trial," a work on the assassination printed in Boston in 1865, of which the third volume is very rare.

In announcing the Stern gift, Dr. Evans expressed "gratitude" for the "munificent and public-spirited gift."

Stern Plans Endowment

The librarian also said that Stern plans to accompany his gift with an endowment sufficient to provide for its perpetual enlargement, and to permit from time to time the publication of catalogues, bibliographies and studies designed to increase the collection's usefulness.

The gift of the collection to the Library of Congress ends speculation that has prevailed in "Lincoln" circles as to its eventual disposition. The other great collection of Lincoln material, in recent times, that of the late Oliver Barrett, has been offered for sale and the Illinois State Historical Library, at Springfield, is currently endeavoring to raise funds for its purchase.

The Library of Congress' Lincoln exhibition is divided into two sections, treasures from the Stern collection and selections from its other collections chosen to illustrate Lincoln's stature beyond the United States.

In the latter group is a gold portrait medal of the martyred President given to his widow in 1866 by the republican citizens of France during the Third Empire. Shown with it are the letters of transmission, including one signed by Victor Hugo and Louis Blanc.

West Zone Voting Today to Sound Rearming Views

FRANKFURT, Germany, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Five and a half million West Germans will go to the polls in United States-occupied Hesse and Wuerttemberg-Baden Sunday in state elections that may provide an accurate barometer on rearmament sentiment.

The Socialists have turned the elections into an unofficial plebiscite by making "no rearmament" their major campaign plank. The elections also will test the political strength of the refugees and expellees from the East who have organized politically in two states for the first time.

Socialist Leader Kurt Schumacher entered both states to deliver sizzling attacks on rearmament, forcing Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's Christian Democrat Union and President Theodor Heuss' Free Democratic Party (Liberals) to take strong stands supporting a limited German army.

At stake are the 100-seat Wuerttemberg-Balen Landstag, or legislature, and the 80-seat Hessen Langstag. The following Sunday similar elections will be held in Bavaria.

Swimming Classes Start Monday at YMCA

Swimming classes for adult males will begin Monday at the Y. M. C. A., 1736 G st. nw., under direction of Frank Martin.

"Any man or boy can become a good strong swimmer in two or three weeks time," said Martin. Expert instructors with free lessons and exhibitions will be on hand, he says.

Barbers' Anniversary

Local 239, Journeymen Barbers' International Union, will observe its fiftieth anniversary at a 7:30 p. m. dinner Monday at the Hotel Statler, Charles J. Bovello, general chairman, announced yesterday.

Reserve Officers Reunion

The local Air Force chapter, Reserve Officers Association, will hold its annual reunion at the Old Georgetown Hospitality Hall, 26th and D sts. nw., Monday, starting at 7:30 p. m.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Defense Program Begins to Pinch

You can find these contradictions in today's business outlook:

1. Steel production is just about at an all-time high, and steel companies are expanding capacity (see chart), yet users of steel say there's not enough. Some auto companies have curtailed output because of parts shortages.

Livingston

2. Home-building contractors are gloomy. They're hit by Regulation X, which controls new credit. But large-scale construction companies that build factories, roads, public buildings are busy. A survey just completed by Business Week indicates that business expenditures on new plant and equipment next year are likely to be 10 percent higher than this year. The defense program has spurred expansion by firms which make basic raw materials. Steel is a case in point.

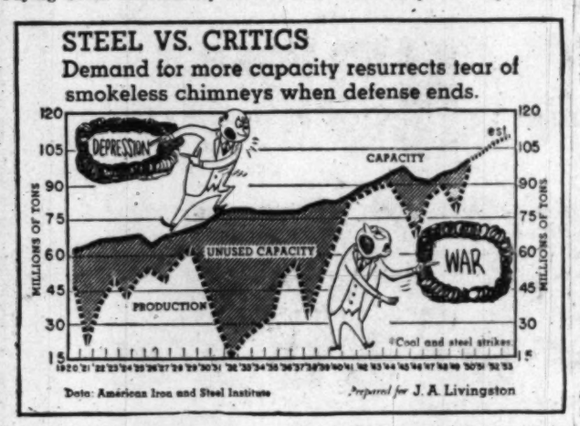
3. Users of aluminum for civilian products, such as ash trays, pots and pans, and window frames, are in the dumps, wondering if they can stay in business. The cutback of 35 percent in civilian allotments means the difference between profit and loss, survival and extinction, for many manufacturers. Yet, airplane manufacturers, who for so long after VJ-Day starved for business, now see chances of volume production again.

Regulation W Under Fire

4. In Chicago, the American Finance Conference, trade association of consumer credit companies, at its annual convention, violently attacked the Federal Reserve Board for Regulation W, which has cut down loans on automobiles, refrigerators, washing machines, etc. Yes business loans of commercial banks continue to expand, despite efforts of the Federal Reserve Board to curb lending.

Obviously, the defense program is beginning to pinch. And the business men who are hurt sometimes talk dourly of an oncoming depression. The argument is that the controls are cutting into production too fast—before defense orders take hold. Result: Unemployment will develop. It's the same line of attack Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, launched against Regulation W.

Merchants are beginning to feel good again. They suffered an attack of the blues last month when sales fell off following the scare-buying boom immediately after Korea. The drop was expectable.



But no merchant considers logic when his sales drop. However, in the week ended November 11, department store volume breasted the corresponding week of 1949 by 8 percent. Two holidays, on which stores remained open—Armistice and Election Days—were a factor. (Last year, elections, if any, were local.)

Christmas Test Ahead

The rise in sales helped to clear away inventories. Many stores had been liberal in their buying after Korea—fearing shortages. At the end of September, department store inventories were 19 percent above a year ago. Merchants are still not out of trouble. The test lies immediately ahead—in the 26 shopping days between Thanksgiving and Christmas. If goods don't move, shoppers can look ahead to spectacular clearance sales in January. But merchants are taking Armistice Week as a favorable sign.

The prospect of a depression is remote. To be sure, some unemployment may be created, if home-building slumps badly, if automobile companies are forced to cut back output, and if other civilian manufacturers are squeezed by allocations of critical materials, such as aluminum, steel, copper, rubber, and so on. Defense orders never mesh perfectly with the drop in civilian output. Nevertheless, defense orders are beginning to come through and will act as a cushion against any major drop in production and employment.

Inflation Has the Edge

The primary problem facing the country today is still inflation, not depression. The demand for workers in most communities is still greater than supply. That's indicated by the willingness of workers to quit jobs. In September, 35 out of every thousand workers quit, as against 29 per thousand in August, and 21 per thousand in September 1949. Workers don't tell the boss off unless they know jobs are to be had down the street or unless they already have other jobs.

Furthermore, the upward trend continues in prices. The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of 28 sensitive commodities is at a post-Korean high. And a rise in steel prices—forecast by Benjamin Fairless of United States Steel—is bound to push the level of costs up some more. Washington officials have been pressing steel companies to absorb the prospective wage boost. Now their hopes seem dashed.

The talk of a business slump and the letdown in retail sales in October and early November have been a salutary respite from the psychology of inflation. President Truman's request to Congress for action on an excess profits tax has also induced business caution.

Even if Congress balks at an excess profits tax, a hefty increase in the corporate burden is certain in '51. As a result, profits are likely to be lower. That, in itself, puts a ceiling on corporate optimism. That's salutary too. You can't check inflation if everything goes up—prices, wages, and profits. You have to start to check the spiral somewhere.

Ray Is Slated To Head U. S. Loan League

Walter J. L. Ray is slated to be elected president of the United Savings and Loan League at the fifty-eighth annual convention here next week.

RAY

Ray is president of the Standard Federal Savings and Loan Association of Detroit. He will succeed Henry A. Bubb of Topeka, Kan. Nominated for the national vice presidency is Ben Hazen of Portland, Ore.

The meeting, first to be held in Washington in many years, is expected to draw a record attendance of more than 2000. Government and business leaders are scheduled to speak.

On Monday, November 27, the trade organization's policy-making executive committee and its 26 standing committees will convene.

General business sessions will get under way November 29 in the Statler Hotel with the presentation of the president's annual report. Morton Bodfish, the league's chairman of the executive committee, will also address this session.

On November 30, speakers will include William K. Divers, chairman of the Home Loan Bank Board; Representative Spence, and Charles T. Fisher, administrator of the Office of Real Estate Credit, Federal Reserve System. A round-table discussion on home building and home financing also is scheduled.

Among the speakers at the closing session on December 1 will be Dr. Sumner Slichter of Harvard University and Raymond Moley.

YULE CLUBS. Three local savings and loan associations are disbursing nearly $1,300,000 in Christmas Club savings to 14,806 members. First Federal is paying $713,192 to 6970 accounts. Columbia Federal reports $575,534 for 7036 members, and Anacostia is paying about $50,000 to 800 members. All three anticipate a substantially larger total for next year's clubs, applications for which already are being received.

WORD TO THE WISE: Don't be alarmed and call the Secret Service if some of the crisp new $5, $10 and $20 bills you may get in a few days look a little different. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing has just changed the design of these notes. The serial numbers are slightly reduced from their former size, and are now identical with the numbers on $1 bills. Identification of issuing Federal Reserve Bank and Treasury seal also have been made slightly smaller. First delivery of the new notes anywhere has been made to the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond. It contained $1,800,000 in $5 notes, $3,600,000 in $10's, and $1,200,000 in $20's.

HONORED: George A. Arkwright, former chairman of the New York State Public Service Commission who recently was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court of New York, was honored at a testimonial dinner here in the Washington Club. Host was John R. Waller, president of the International Bank of Washington, who has known Justice Arkwright for many years. Attending was a cross section of Washington's business, government and professional leaders.

STORE SALES: Despite an upward trend nationally, Washington department store sales in the week ended November 11 slipped 2 percent below the 1949 level. Our 'Mothball' Fleet Has Proved Its Worth in War

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

NEWPORT NEWS, Va.—America's "mothball fleet" program—a much questioned postwar experiment—has passed its first test with full credit, if not with flying colors.

In the past five months of mobilization, more than 200 ships have been hauled out of "cold storage." Another 300 are being readied for sea. On the basis of performance to date, it is clear that the warships and merchantmen still are in good shape after their five-year lay-up.

And, in cases where speed of mobilization was vital—a key point in the program—the ships were ready sooner than 'most everyone, including the Communist high command, expected.

When we went into Korea, logistics chiefs said they needed 250 additional merchant vessels in the Pacific. The American merchant marine and foreign fleets could provide less than 100 of them. The other 152 were hauled out of mothballs.

Fighter planes had to be rushed to the Far East. Divisions at home were alerted for Korea. Pacific Fleet commanders called for more fighting ships. So aircraft carriers, troop transports and other warships were hurriedly pulled out of the reserve fleet.

It Paid Off

THE RECORD was not 100 percent perfect. No major combatant ships in mothballs were readied in time for the major operations around Korea. But the big turning point of the war—the Inchon invasion—was made possible by planes, men and supplies hauled across the Pacific in de-mothballed ships. It caught the Red leaders flatfooted, confident that our counteroffensive could not be mounted so soon. It is safe to say that the program paid off.

Important lessons were learned in the process. Both Navy and Maritime Administration officials discovered and are correcting some flaws in their highly different ship preservation methods and mobilization plans. This can be very helpful in a future total mobilization.

One by-product has been a comparative evaluation of the Navy and maritime systems—the first really made. A Navy board, to the surprise of many, found considerable merit in the cheaper, make-do techniques of the merchant sailors. They may adopt some, to the advantage of American taxpayers.

The United States has a lot of money invested in laid-up ships—a cool 28 billion dollars at today's replacement costs. We spent about 500 million dollars on the vessels during the past five years. Now that the mothball program has been tested, The Washington Post felt it was a good time for stocktaking.

The Background

HOW SUCCESSFUL was the mothball fleet concept? What happened to the ships while in cold storage? Which techniques worked and which didn't? What lessons were learned during the Korean test which will help during another emergency?

To get the answers, The Washington Post interviewed Navy and Maritime Administration chiefs, studied the available files and records and made field trips to the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard, the Norfolk Base, the James River Reserve Fleet and the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. yard here.

Just to draw in the background, after VJ-Day the United States found itself with the greatest naval and merchant armada the world had ever seen—some 14,000 seagoing ships. Obviously only a fraction of them could be operated in peacetime and there was much scratching of official heads about what to do with the rest.

Some were ordered scrapped and others were earmarked for foreign sale. There remained more than 5000 vessels — too valuable to get rid of, too costly to keep in service. The decision was made to lay the rest of them "away in mothballs," as someone then put it, ready for a future emergency.

Two plans for maintaining the laid-up ships were approved. The Navy scheme, developed by Capt. H. Gordon Donald, now retired and living in Washington, called for readying the vessels for instant service and "putting them away in a zipper bag."

Donald's rather expensive method contrasted sharply with what the Navy had done with its surplus warships after two prior wars. The steam-propelled iron ships built during the Civil War were tied up and left to rot, while conservative admirals, with limited funds for buying coal, kept wooden sailing vessels in service.

Following World War I, we stripped down our laid-up vessels, daubed red paint and preservative over them and hoped for the best. Out of this "red-lead fleet" came the 100 destroyers traded to Britain for Atlantic bases, and many another ship fighting the U-boats in the crucial early years of World War II.

It took a lot of doing to get such ships ready for combat. Donald's "zipper bag" concept, on the other hand, envisaged complete overhauls before mothballing, keeping the vessels in top shape while laid up, and arrival of Naval Reserve crews five days after mobilization to activate and take them to sea.

It was a beautiful plan, but it was not carried out fully. Demobilization intervened, and "Bring Johnny home" took overriding precedent. Only 40 percent of the ships were overhauled before mothballing. Too often, even the decommissioning job was rushed and incomplete. In some cases records and blueprints were lost, and routine maintenance and repairs were neglected.

Reserve Fleet crewmen, however, did the best they could. The lay-up process was complicated and expensive. Air-tight cocoons—nicknamed "igloos"—were built over gun turrets. Similar shrouding was placed over topside vitals. Hull, decks and superstructure were scraped and painted.

Below decks, a novel experiment was tried. Machines containing a dessicant and blowers were installed and dry air approximating the humidity of the Arizona Desert was piped through the ships' fire mains. Almost everything below—spare parts, bedding, instruments, complicated fire-control, radio and radar equipment, electric wiring, even such things as pianos—was left in place. A special preservative was used on the engines and boilers.

Then the interior of the ship, plus gun turrets, was sealed up. Officers and men of the Reserve Fleet made regular inspections of the vessels to assure that the dehumidification machines were operating, seals were intact and moisture conditions were right. Maintenance of the decks, hulls and superstructure went on.

It was far more costly in both trained manpower and money than anything ever attempted before. From VJ-Day through last June, the Reserve Navy spent about 450 million dollars on its Reserve Fleet. About 1000 officers and 15,000 enlisted men are assigned to maintain the laid-up ships.

The cost, and particularly the diversion of highly skilled manpower from the active fleet, let the entire program in for criticism both from within and without the Navy. Extremists attacked it as a huge boondoggle, and the fleet was a white elephant. Many naval officers felt we should keep more ships in active service and simply tie up the rest. The ships were rapidly getting obsolete anyway, some argued, and were a "psychological block" to the building of new ships.

Under the Johnson economy program, the five-year overhaul plan was stopped and repair money was cut. But fleet maintenance men argued eloquently the need for "keeping up insurance premiums," and the curtailed program kept going.

Contrasting with the Navy Reserve Fleet plan was Capt. Ernest Gorman's Maritime Commission program, under which a larger number of ships has been maintained at one tenth the Navy cost. Maritime Reserve Fleet spending for the past five years totals 45 million dollars.

The methods employed are far different. Instead of being tied to docks at Navy yards,

Congress Got a Crowded Start Here

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

AN UNUSUAL three inches of snow fell on Friday, but it was typical Washington winter mush by Saturday. The dirt roads were quagmires as the two-horse stage left M st. at Wisconsin ave. in Georgetown promptly at 8:30 a. m. for the Capitol.

It was Saturday, November 22, 1800, and the second session of the Sixth Congress was about to meet in the first joint session to be held in the new Capitol.

On Monday, the 17th, Senators and Representatives had gathered at the Capitol for their first sessions in Washington, but neither house had a quorum. Only 15 of the 32 Senators and 42 of the 106 Representatives showed up.

By Tuesday, 16 more House members were on hand to make a quorum—a majority of the membership. It took the Senate until Friday to get its quorum. At that, Vice President Thomas Jefferson didn't arrive from his Monticello, Va., home until the 28th and Senator John E. Howard of Maryland was chosen President pro tem to preside until his arrival.

The Capitol was the most complete of the city's two chief public buildings—the White House was the other—but it was far from the Capitol we know today.

The original plan called for two wings and a rotunda with a small dome, but it was not until 1827 that this plan was completed. The present Senate and House wings and the vast cast iron dome were added between 1850 and 1863.

One Wing Completed

ON THAT November Day in 1800, the members of the Sixth Congress were walking and riding toward a tiny building atop Capitol Hill. The Capitol consisted of what is now known as the Supreme Court (north) wing. Foundations had been laid for the rotunda and the other wing to the south, but nothing more.

Both the House and the Senate met in this single wing, and the Supreme Court crowded in, too, beginning in the spring of 1801.

The Senate chamber, where the first joint session was held, was on the ground floor where the law library is now. It was a two-story chamber. Some years later the Senate was moved upstairs with the creation of the room now kept as the old Supreme Court chamber. There the Senate met for half a century, from 1810 to 1859, and there it will meet again November 27 because of the modernization of its present quarters.

On the walls of the chamber that day when President John Adams arrived were portraits of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, presented in 1784 to the Continental Congress by that monarch (he was beheaded in 1793).

John Adams, second President of the United States, was a lame duck Chief Executive as he went to the Capitol that November day, but nobody knew it at the time.

Adams arrived in coach and four, a practice that brought him criticism for aping the monarchs of Europe.

Residence of Virtue

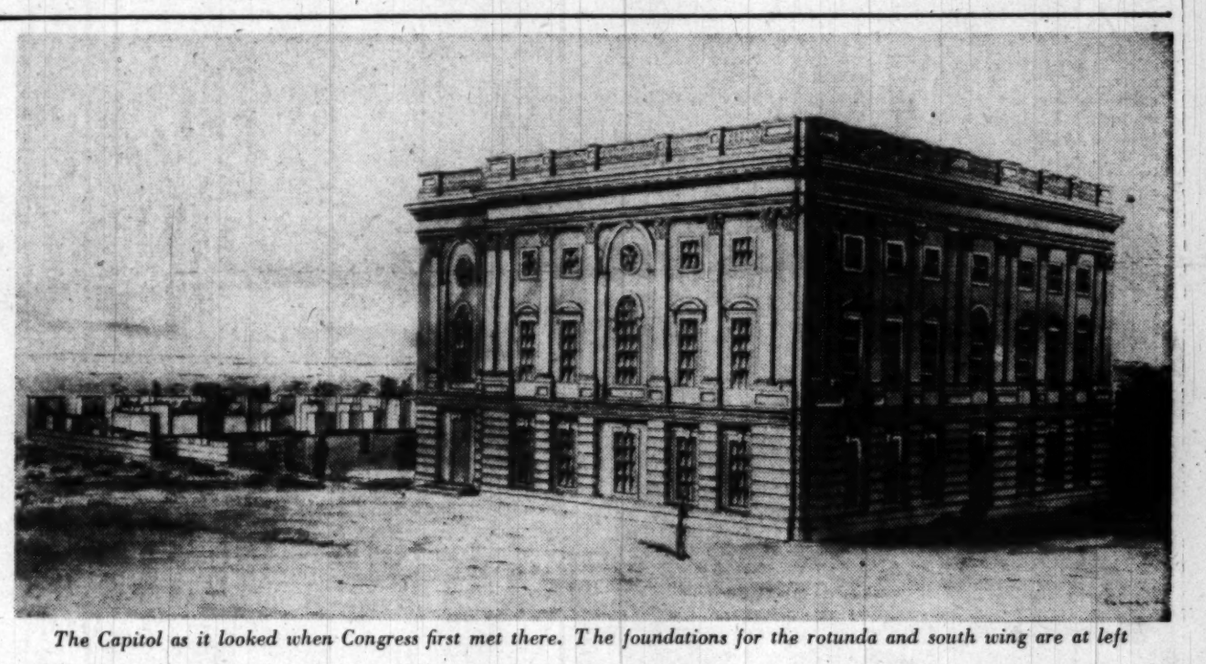
AS THE Senators and Representatives crowded the Senate chamber, Adams came forward and read his address.

First, he said that the executive branch already was established in the new Capitol and was conducting "the ordinary business of the Government in this place." Then he went on:

"I congratulate the people of the United States on the assembling of Congress at the permanent seat of their Government; and I congratulate you, gentlemen, on the prospect of a residence not to be changed."

Adams continued:

"Although there is cause to apprehend that accommodations are not now so complete as might be wished, yet there is great reason to believe this inconvenience will cease with the present session."



The Capitol as it looked when Congress first met there. The foundations for the rotunda and south wing are at left

Adams went on to ask God's blessing and to implore:

"May this Territory be the residence of virtue and happiness. In this city may that piety and virtue, that wisdom and magnanimity, that constancy and self-government which adorned the great character whose name it bears, be forever held in veneration. Here, and throughout our country, may simple manners, pure morals and true religion flourish forever!"

A century and a half later, those virtues appear to be about as remote as ever.

Adams said it was up to Congress to "consider whether the local powers over the District of Columbia, vested by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, shall be immediately exercised." If Congress decided to take up the matter (which it soon did), then, said Adams, it ought "to take into view the future probable situation of the Territory for the happiness of which you are about to provide."

F. D. R.'s Letters Show Worry Over War

THIS is the eighth installment of letters selected from "F. D. R.: His Personal Letters." They cover the last quarter of 1935 and the first quarter of 1936, and show Roosevelt's increasing concern over the international situation.

Prominent in this correspondence are the workings of the Neutrality Resolution of August 31, 1935; Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia and its League of Nations repercussions, and the London Naval Conference where Japan formally demanded naval parity and withdrew when she was voted down.

F.D.R. to W. Russell Bowie in New York
THE WHITE HOUSE,
OCT. 30, 1935

Dear Russell:

Thank you for that clipping from the "Times." The difficulty is that under ordinary and normal circumstances wheat, cotton and copper ingots are not implements of war. The letter of the law does not say so and the trouble is that the spirit of the law, as shown by the debates during its passage, does not allow me to stretch it that far out—no matter how worthy the cause. As ever yours,

Although the Neutrality Resolution prohibited the shipment only of arms, ammunition and implements of war, the Administration did seek to discourage trade in all war materials, particularly oil.

F.D.R. to Lincoln MacVeagh in Athens
HYDE PARK,
NOV. 2, 1935

Dear Lincoln:

It is good to get your interesting letter of October fifteenth. You are very clearly in one of the most interesting spots in Europe just now. Cannon to right of you, cannon to left of you, and apparently quite a lot of potential cannon right next door in Athens.

Things move so fast that no one can tell what will be the story a month from now. Meanwhile, as you know, we are really keeping our skirts clear of any involvements.

Always sincerely,

MacVeagh had reported from Athens that warships of both England and Italy were prowling around that part of the world, equipped for any emergency. Greece, while sympathetic with England, was even more anxious to preserve neutrality in the event war broke out between England and Italy. Within Greece, a coalition of Royalists and generals had recently overthrown the government and set up a regency, preparatory to holding a plebiscite on the King's recall.

F. D. R. to Cordell Hull in Washington
WARM SPRINGS,
NOV. 27, 1935

Dear Cordell:

That memorandum of your conversation with the Italian Ambassador on November twenty-second is a classic. You did a splendid job in making our position clear and, at the same time, pointing out the very untenable position in which Italy has deliberately placed herself.

In regard to the 1871 treaty, there is, of course, the undoubted fact that Italy, by a deliberate violation of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, made strict compliance with the old treaty impossible. Furthermore, I very much doubt whether the language in the 1871 treaty was ever intended to apply to a situation in which one nation was engaged in a war in which that nation was the aggressor.

As ever yours,

The Italian Ambassador had called on Hull to complain that official declarations and public statements, especially Hull's of November 15, were making the Neutrality Act into a weapon against Italy, despite its formal pretensions of applying equally to all belligerents. In particular, he took exception to the statement by Hull that certain commodities, such as oil, copper, trucks, tractors, scrap iron and scrap steel were essential war materials, even though not actually "arms, munitions and implements of war," and that recent abnormally high exports of these materials were contrary to the policy of the United States Government.

The Italian Ambassador regarded this statement as opposed to the letter and spirit of the treaty of 1871 between the United States and Italy, which guaranteed each contracting party "complete freedom of commerce and navigation." Hull rejected the protest, and replied vigorously that if the Italian government made it public the likely result would be that American public opinion would insist on legislation embargoing all trade. He found the Italian protest even less understandable when he recalled that Mussolini, who had ignored the American plea not to resort to war, now expected us to help him prosecute that war.

F.D.R. to William E. Dodd in Berlin
WARM SPRINGS,
DEC. 2, 1935

My dear Dodd:

I am glad to know from yours of October thirty-first that I was right in assuming that there had been no real change in German policy for the last few months. It seems clear that from the point of view of the group which now controls the destinies of the German people, their policy is succeeding admirably. Germany got an acceptance, passive though it may have been, of her rearmament by land and sea. Germany has kept out of the Italian situation by resigning from Geneva. Germany seems to be staving off actual bankruptcy through the tricky Schacht policies which win him the admiration of the international bankers.

I wish I could talk with you at length in regard to the Neutrality situation. If you had been here I do not think that you would have felt the Senate Bill last August was an unmitigated evil. The crux of the matter lies in the deep question of allowing some discretion to the Chief Executive. Quite aside from any connection with the league, the President should have some discretion. For example, if some European power were to seek, by force of arms, a raw material source in South America, we should have to take sides and might without, going to war ourselves, assist the South American nation with supplies of one kind or another. Complete stoppage of all arms material in the broadest sense in the case of a European conflict can be attained, and last summer's law tends in that direction. Meanwhile, the country is being fairly well educated, and I hope that next January I can get an even stronger law, leaving, however, some authority to the President.

Shrewd Temporizer Bosses Pinkish Guatemala

By Benjamin Muse
Former Foreign Service Officer

WHETHER OR NOT the nearest thing to a Communist-controlled government in the Western Hemisphere will continue down the Communist road will depend largely upon the character and ability of tall, 37-year-old Lieut. Col. Jacob Arbenz, who has just been elected President of Guatemala.

Colonel Arbenz was the candidate of the groups supporting the present incumbent, President Juan Jose Arevalo, whose Red connections and rampant anti-Americanism have caused widespread concern. Arbenz's own intentions are the subject of anxious and divergent guessing by observers throughout the hemisphere.

The vote for leading candidates in the election last weekend was approximately: Arbenz, 243,000; Gen. Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes, 68,000; Jose Garcia Granados, 30,000; Dr. Victor Giordani, 16,000, and Manuel Galich, 6000. Some 12,000 votes were divided among five other candidates.

The protest vote is represented mainly in the figure for General Ydigoras Fuentes, who was the spearhead of conservative opposition. He had formerly been identified with the dictatorship of Gen. Jorge Ubico, and he came out of hiding to be qualified as a candidate too late for a campaign. The other four candidates named represented moderate or middle-of-the-road elements. Two of them, Galich and Giordani, got on the bandwagon before the three-day election was over and instructed their followers to vote for Arbenz.

ABOUT THE SIZE of Mississippi, but with twice the population of that State, Guatemala is the largest of the five Central American countries. It is the most predominantly Indian of the 20 republics of Latin America.

Most of Guatemala lies from 4000 to 11,500 feet high in the mountains of the Sierra Madre, which gives it an enviable perennial-spring climate. It has Maya ruins of rare interest to archeologist and traveler, and a capital of a quarter million people, which combines modern conveniences with the charm of antiquity. Under stable governmental conditions, the country would be a minor tourist mecca, in addition to enjoying a trade in coffee and bananas.

But Guatemala has always been a political problem child. She has known only dictatorships interspersed with revolutions in her century and a quarter of independent existence—at least until the election of Arevalo in 1944. Arevalo, despite a score of frustrated plots and minor revolts, has served all but four months of his constitutional term of six years. He has seen his successor elected, and he is still alive and in office—which is a record in this Central American republic. But, instead of either the traditional dictatorship, or revolution, Guatemala now has something dangerously close to communism.

It didn't come immediately when the 13-year rule of Dictator Ubico terminated in 1944. It was the hope of the leaders of the revolutionary movement from which Arevalo emerged as President that democracy could at last be made to work in Guatemala, and for two years his administration gave evidence of a liberal and progressive purpose. But gradually more and more Reds moved into key positions, and leaders of the original movement stepped out. Now Communists and near Communists have infiltrated every agency of the government, and they are the dominant factor in the present regime.

Assassinations and gang outrages have been frequent occurrences. Col. Francis Javier Arana, who headed the revolutionary junta but was an anti-Communist with presidential aspirations, was murdered in July, 1949, and a small-scale army insurrection followed. It was suppressed, at the cost of several hundred lives, by Minister of Defense Arbenz—the same Arbenz who will be inaugurated next March as President.

In many respects, Guatemala is an odd country to receive so much Communist attention. It is much too far from Russia to develop military strength based on Soviet aid, and for the United States to neutralize its insignificant military potential would be a minor operation. Guatemala is also dependent economically upon the United States; this country takes 85 percent of her exports and supplies 75 percent of her imports. In case of war, enemy saboteurs would have little scope in Guatemala; that country's contribution to our strategic raw materials is neither impressive nor indispensable.

The several million Indians, speaking 18 different dialects, who are 60 percent of Guatemala's population, are difficult subjects for indoctrination. The danger of Guatemalan communism spilling over into neighboring countries is not immediately acute. The other four Central American governments are currently allergic to Communists to a healthy degree, and the contiguous Mexican territory is the most undeveloped and sparsely inhabited part of that republic.

Communist exploitation of Guatemala's political instability makes plenty of sense, nevertheless, from the point of view of the Cominform's long-range strategy, and it constitutes a menace to the United States of a serious, though peculiarly Latin-American, kind.

The prime objective of Communists in Latin America is to revive every old grievance and fan into a flame every ember of hatred for the United States. In Guatemala, press, radio, mass meetings and parades have been used to that end, with the connivance of the government, and leftist anti-American agitators from many countries are finding a hospitable base of operations in that country.

Although the Arevalo government has repeatedly professed solidarity with the United States and the United Nations, last spring, at the behest of Communist elements, it requested the recall of American Ambassador Richard C. Patterson, jr. He has not returned to the Guatemalan capital.

Cominform policy in Guatemala seeks to lead that unfortunate good neighbor into a progressively hostile attitude toward the United States. The ultimate aim is to create a situation which—particularly in the event of a United States-Russian break—might provoke coercive action by this country. It is a design which is fraught with danger for the whole inter-American system—important enough, indeed, to have emanated from the Politburo level.

For a Guatemalan incident of that character would reverberate throughout the Western Hemisphere. The sins of communism would be forgiven even in many conservative quarters in the ensuing wave of Latin American opposition to the time-honored bogey of American intervention. The State Department knows this and is watching Guatemalan developments with the utmost caution.

BOTH AREVALO and Arbenz, however, profess to be using Communist support only as a means of holding together a democratic political structure in Guatemala. Both are opportunitists, whose real convictions are difficult to fathom.

Col. Elfego H. Monzon, who was forced to resign as Minister of the Interior six weeks ago because of his campaign against Communist excesses, is betting on Arbenz to turn the Communists out. Many other non-Communist friends of Arbenz believe that he will temporize with Communists only to the extent which may be necessary to enable a liberal government to function. But it would be more accurate to say that he will temporize with both Communists and liberals to the extent which may be necessary to keep Arbenz in power. With the conservatives in bitter opposition, this may be the only course open to him.

Enigmatic young Arbenz, whose father was Swiss, has little personal magnetism. He will not develop into a Central American Tito. He has achieved power by manipulation and shrewd calculation of political exigencies. He may well conclude that the Communist road in isolated Guatemala is a blind alley, and gravitate to the right. On the other hand, he may not, and the alternatives are both bad: the Communist trend may continue—or Guatemala may bring the Communist chapter to a close by resuming her traditional sequence of revolution and dictatorship.

'Mothballing' Giving Us 510 Vessels in a Pinch

merchantmen are moored in large numbers at remote anchorages.

When laid up, the ships first are stripped of all perishables and semiperishables — bedding, canvas, rope, etc., are stored ashore. The cargo-handling equipment is removed and put in the hold, water lines are drained and the electrical equipment is cleaned and varnished. One boiler is filled with preservative oil which is pumped through all machinery and pipes.

Then decks, superstructure and the hulls above the waterline are blasted with high-pressure fire hoses. This removes most of the old paint and rust and a heavy coating of oil and red oxide is sprayed on. It looks like red paint, but dries completely only after many months. The coating not only prevents further rust; it loosens the old paint and scale, which can be removed almost entirely by a second blasting.

This water pressure method—many times cheaper than the conventional chip and paint technique employed on Navy ships—is a Maritime Commission innovation. It's not as thorough as the Navy system, but it preserves the ships.

OF COURSE, the whole approach and objective of the Navy and Maritime Administration systems is different. "We're trying to preserve some old trucks and tractors," said one Maritime official. "The Navy is keeping a fleet of limousines in a condition of near readiness."

When the Korean war started, the Navy had 2125 ships in the mothball fleet—more than three times those in the active fleet. The laid-up vessels included 83 aircraft carriers, 15 battleships, 58 cruisers, 198 destroyers and 98 submarines. It would cost 22 billion dollars to replace them today.

Sixty-two of the vessels have been activated, according to an announcement six weeks ago, and 296 others will be demothballed by next summer to strengthen the active fleet. About 375 million dollars is expected to be spent in readying them for service, including modernization of electronics, antisubmarine gear, etc.

Late in June, there were 2277 freighters, tankers, old passenger ships and miscellaneous types in the Maritime reserve fleet, worth about six billion dollars at today's building costs. Twenty million dollars was spent in fitting out 152 of the best of them.

Crewmen of the U.S.S. Macon clean preservative from an 8-inch gun as the heavy cruiser emerges from "mothballs" at the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard

Thus, for an outlay of about 900 million dollars—the total spending on the mothball fleet to date, plus reactivation costs—the United States is getting 510 ships it would have to pay $3,600,000,000 for now. And the great bulk of the reserve fleets is still untouched.

Most important, the Nation is getting the warships and merchantmen into service in periods ranging from 10 days to 12 months. It would take up to three years to build many of them, at great dislocation of the rest of the defense effort and civilian economy, because of the huge quantities of steel and other scarce materials involved.

THIS was the pay-off on the mothball experiment. Here are some instances of the lessons learned in the process:

1. The Navy's elaborate below-decks dehumidification process proved almost 100 percent successful. The machinery and electrical systems on recommissioned ships seem as good as ever—though how they'll stand up under rugged service remains to be seen. Guns and elaborate fire control mechanism on some vessels reactivated at Philadelphia proved to be better than those on many ships in service.

2. Topside, the story was different. Five years of research failed to produce anything that would beat the elements except constant and painstaking maintenance. Ready ammunition boxes, ladders, radar—everything that could be detached—were moved below in the dry interior. Insulated wiring held up, but not connections and fuse boxes. The Navy moved them below and plugged up the wire ends.

Wooden carrier decks took a beating. A plan to cover them with fabric covers and tar was a failure. An answer finally was found: list the ship so the deck will drain, and slap on three coats of house paint.

Chipping and painting seemed the only way to preserve the exposed hulls and superstructure, though the Navy is now giving careful study to the Maritime water blasting plan. And a commercial firm in Florida has a promising method of blasting with wet sand.

3. HULL DETERIORATION also went on underwater. Periodic drydocking has been necessary, except in the reserve fleet at Green Cove Springs, Fla., where the black swamp water acts as a preservative. Navy chiefs also are much interested in a novel Maritime Administration method of stopping bottom corrosion.

Under this "cathodic protection" system, strings of magnesium bars are hung over the sides of ships. The two dissimilar metals—magnesium and the steel in the hulls—become a wet cell battery in the salt or brackish water and the electric current prevents corrosion and pitting of the hull. While successful, and costing less than one quarter of the expense of drydocking and painting, the system does not do anything about barnacles.

4. By a combination of circumstances, the merchantmen for the most part were gotten to sea faster than the warships. The Maritime plan calls for all reactivation being done by commercial shipyards. As things worked out, the yards were able to drydock, clean up, repaint and repair the 152 vessels without straining in two to three weeks, and crews for them were available around union headquarters in major ports.

Navy mobilization plans provide for a crew of Reserve officers and men to report five days after M-Day and activate the ship under direction of exports permanently assigned to the Reserve Fleet. Under the "partial mobilization" procedure of the current emergency, crews did not report until considerably later. Reserve Fleet personnel did the bulk of the demothballing.

5. THE MARITIME reserve fleet received an unexpected "outside" evaluation last summer. When Assistant Navy Secretary John T. Koehler became acting chief of the Maritime Administration last May after its reorganization, he was aware of a widely held opinion that the merchantmen were rotting away. Not a nickel had been appropriated by Congress for drydocking and overhauling the ships, and the daubed-up craft certainly didn't look a bit smart or shipshape. Maritime officials assured him the ships were all right.

To get an independent opinion, Koehler arranged for the Navy Board of Inspection and Survey to go over the Maritime reserve fleets. Its report, submitted September 14, found the ships on which the laying-up process had been completed to be "in satisfactory condition."

This view was born out by ship repair chiefs of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. here. The yard did most of the reactivation of the merchantmen from the nearby James River Reserve Fleet. After five years in storage, the vessels were in comparable shape to ships putting in for overhaul after a couple of years at sea, they said.

The Navy board also had words of praise for the Maritime Administration, noting that the preservation job has been accomplished "with a very small expenditure of funds and manpower."

A TRIP to the James River Reserve Fleet provides convincing evidence of this and proof of the old saw about necessity being the mother of invention. Capt. John J. Fallon, commander, and Capt. Allan Hoffman, fleet captain, both Naval Reservists who skippered attack transports during the war, have made a virtue of poverty and improvisation.

Their greatest triumph is a "jet propelled" water monitor used to blast scale and old paint off ships' hulls. A tower was installed on an old barge and a standard firehose mounted. It can clean one side of a hull in a day. The neatest part of the trick is propulsion of the barge. All the helmsman does is turn and depress the hose. The jet effect skims the craft along.

6. Both Navy and Maritime officials agree on one thing—you only get out of mothballs what you put in. Most instances of machinery and parts replacement could be traced to defects not remedied when the ships were laid up. Warships put in reserve in 1948 were in far better shape than those hurriedly decommissioned in 1945.

7. Both Navy and Maritime officials say more maintenance funds are needed. Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane, USN (retired), new head of the Maritime Administration, wants to make repairs on 300 to 400 of his ships. Heretofore, only money for preservation has been spent, but Congress last session voted 18 million dollars for repair of about 100 of them.

Cochrane says also that we should build more new merchantmen—tankers and fast cargo ships. We've got freighters "running out of our ears," he concedes, but most of them are slow Liberties, sitting ducks to modern Russian submarines. If we get new craft, some of the Liberties should be scrapped, he believes.

Navy fleet maintenance officers want to triple current spending on the mothball fleet and boost Reserve Fleet crews by at least one-third. They say that the plan to completely overhaul laid-up ships every five years—abandoned during the Johnson economy program of last year—should be revived.

But top officials are going a bit slow. They want to evaluate thoroughly the Maritime Administration methods and other experimental techniques under study by the Navy Bureau of Ships.

Mud a 'Legislative' Problem in 1800

ever, could visualize 1950's city of 800,000 with 600,000 more crowding its borders in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

ADAMS SPOKE to the joint session of other problems, of relations with France, of the American Navy, of the need for fortifications along the Nation's seacoast. And to the House members present, Adams said he soon would send up the budget for the coming year.

When Adams had finished, the Representatives went back to their own chamber across the hall. It, too, was a two-story room with the floor where the Senate disbursing office now is located.

BOTH HOUSE and Senate addressed a formal reply to the President and both journeyed down to the White House to read it to Adams in person. The Senate "waited on the President" on the 26th and the House on the 27th. Each reply was first drafted by a committee and debated on the floor.

The Senate draft, a paragraph by paragraph general reply to Adams, was attacked by John Nicholas of Virginia as "calculated to produce discord and division" because it included "political matter." Nicholas raised such a fuss that it was approved by only a 36-32 vote.

Although Congress soon was involved in numerous legislative issues, including the difficult one of how to govern the District of Columbia, only one act of Congress was passed in the year 1800. It was a bill to extend the franking privilege to the Northwest Territory delegate.

THE JOB of delivering the reply to Adams was even more difficult than approving the wording. One House member, John Cotton Smith of Connecticut, wrote this account:

"Usage required that the answer should be presented in a personal attendance of the whole House at the presidential mansion. But how could this be done?

"The only access was by a road long and circuitous to avoid the swamp (along what was to be Pennsylvania ave.) . . . and the mud very deep.

"Fortunately a recruit of hackney coaches from Baltimore, by their seasonable arrival, enabled us to proceed in fine style, preceded by the sergeant-at-arms with the mace, on horseback."

(Jefferson quickly stopped the practice of delivering addresses to Congress in person and the personally delivered reply. He wrote Congress that the whole business was too "inconvenient.")

WASHINGTON by November 22, 1800, had about 9000 inhabitants, including the Congressmen, about 2000 slaves and 400 free Negroes. The Virginia side of what was then the District of Columbia had another 6500 or so inhabitants, 5000 of them in Alexandria. This part of the original 10-mile square was turned back to Virginia in 1846 on the theory that the city would never grow enough to need all that extra space.

Congressman Smith of Connecticut, an avid letter writer, described the city when he arrived here to attend the congressional session. The single wing of the Capitol and the partially completed White House, both built of white sandstone, he called "shining objects in dismal contrast with the scene around them."

Pennsylvania ave. he called "a deep morass covered with alder bushes."

But Smith admired the view of the Potomac, not then so obstructed by buildings and huge trees as it is today. Beyond the river he found "the cultivated fields and blue hills of Maryland and Virginia" together "constituting a prospect of superior beauty and grandeur."

HOUSING was a problem for the Congressmen. Adams had referred to what was in the minds of all when he spoke to the joint session of "accommodations not now so complete as might be wished . . ."

The Southern Congressmen for the most part took up residence in Georgetown, although that presented a transportation problem. The stage left at 8:30 a. m. for the Capitol and the return trip from the Hill terminal (Tunnicliff's Tavern, where the Supreme Court building now stands) began at around 4:30, calling for early adjournment each day.

Most Congressmen came without their wives and lived in what was known as a congressional "mess," a boarding house. Those who wanted to avoid transportation problems lived in one of the many within a few blocks of the Capitol.

Jefferson had rooms in a boarding house where the New House Office Building now stands. He was fortunate in finding both a bedroom and a parlor but he ate at the common board with everyone else.

Speaker Theodore Sedgwick had a room to himself but practically every other Senator and Representative had to double up with a colleague.

A small town with big plans, few inhabitants, much grumbling, many hopes. That was Washington in 1800 as Congress gathered here a century and a half ago to inaugurate the legislative branch in the new Capital.

F.D.R. Wanted Landon as Opponent

I do not know that the United States can save civilization but at least by our example we can make people think and give them the opportunity to save themselves. The trouble is that the people of Germany, Italy and Japan are not given the privilege of thinking.

As ever yours,

The President's effort to reassure Ambassador Dodd that the Neutrality Bill was not an "unmitigated evil" was in answer to Dodd's report that he had wanted to hand in his resignation as a way of protesting the action of Congress, but had been dissuaded by Secretary Hull and Judge Moore, the counselor of the State Department. He was now more persuaded than ever that the neutrality legislation encouraged the aggressors.

F.D.R. to Lincoln MacVeagh in Athens.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Dec. 20, 1935

Dear Lincoln:

Your letter is a joy. I incline to the belief that things can happen under the Democratic or the Parliamentary forms of government which could not possibly have occurred in the days of unlimited monarchies or in the days of the feudal barons. The difficulty with all of it is that usurpation under the color and form of law seems to be increasing by leaps and bounds. The future picture is neither clear nor rosy.

Our British friends have come a sad cropper in the Hoare-Laval proposal. At this writing it looks to me like a sharpening of the tension between England and Italy.

What is your thought about the future of Greece, in the event that Mussolini should succeed in his Ethiopian venture? Would he, a few years from now, seek to do the same thing to Greece?

I wish I could run over and see you.

As ever yours,

The League Council had declared Italy an aggressor, and initiated economic and financial sanctions. On December 7, an agreement between Hoare and Laval was revealed in the French press, under which Italy would have received a sizable part of Ethiopia. Public opinion in Europe, particularly in England, revolted against this betrayal of the League. Hoare went out of office, the plan was buried and the antagonism between England and Italy sharpened.

Bernard M. Baruch to F.D.R. in Washington.

NEW YORK CITY,
Dec. 13, 1935

My dear Mr. President:

There is a rumor—very persistent that your military aide known as "Pa" Watson shot two blind turkeys. Also that he is endeavoring to get publicity to overcome the prowess of that well known hunter and horse trader Cary T. Grayson.

The latter has them tied to a tree before he shoots 'em. What a man!

Sincerely,
BERNIE.

F.D.R. to Edwin M. Watson

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Dec. 17, 1935

Memorandum from the President
To Colonel Watson of the Artillery:

1. Formal charges have been preferred against you by General Baruch.
1. Copy enclosed.
3. Reply to these charges requested.

F.D.R.

Edwin M. Watson to F.D.R.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Dec. 19, 1935

Memorandum for the President:

In reference to the report of General Baruch, I beg leave to present a small word picture of what is now alluded to around Woodmont way as the "two-in-one shot Watson."

My companion was in a prone position behind a thick bush, calling to the wild ones—I, in a more alert posture, was behind an equally thick bush, gun in hand—suddenly two fine turkeys sprang into view. So keen were their senses and so swift their reactions that they were practically in full flight before I could get in a shot "from the hip." The results of this shot are now matters of local pride and history.

As to the "Grayson Affair," I ask in a yuletide spirit that we draw over it the veil of charity.

E. M. WATSON,
Lieut. Colonel, F. A.
Military Aide to the President.

F.D.R. to Bernard M. Baruch

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Dec. 20, 1935

To General Baruch
From the Commander-in-Chief
Subject: Charges filed against Col. E. M. Watson:

1. Copy of Colonel Watson's reply is forwarded herewith.
2. Rather than incur the expenses of a Court Martial it is suggested that General Baruch tie Colonel Watson and Admiral Grayson to convenient trees, distant one hundred paces, that each be armed with a bow and arrow, that each be blindfolded, that each be required to emit turkey calls, and that thereafter firing shall begin. It is believed that this will prove:

(a) That neither of them ever shot a turkey,
(b) That they would not recognize a turkey at ten feet.
(c) That both of them should be released on good behavior in your custody.

F. D. R.

Cary T. Grayson to F. D. R. at the White House.

WASHINGTON,
Dec. 26, 1935

Dear Mr. President:

I respectfully acknowledge receipt of your memorandum to General Baruch preferring certain charges against Colonel Watson in which, by some unexplained reason he chose to involve me. I beg to state—

a. That in view of my personal observation of Colonel Watson's marksmanship in the past, it would give me no cause for concern to be a target for him whether tied to a tree or not; regardless of whether he be blindfolded or not; whether he use a bow and arrow or a gun.
b. That Colonel Watson's explanation of his "two-in-one shot" failed to reveal that the turkeys in question were not only blind but also bore white tail feathers, evidence of being tame and not wild and I, better than anyone, know from experience what a tame turkey looks like.
c. That, however heinous may be Colonel Watson's offense or my offense, I implore you to consider that the crime charged against us, even if sustained, though perhaps warranting death by bow and arrow, can hardly justify the extreme penalty of being consigned to the custody of General Baruch.

Respectfully,
GRAYSON.

As hinted in one of today's letters, F.D.R. wanted Alf Landon as his opponent in 1936 because he considered him easy to beat. Later, an agricultural conference here brought two presidential contestants together in an election year for the first time in 30 years. The Kansas Governor is at left, and in the background may be seen a Senator who came to occupy Roosevelt's seat—Harry S. Truman of Missouri

THE private papers for 1936 bear testimony to F.D.R.'s growing fear that the situation abroad might at any moment flare into world war. Any hope small nations still had in the League of Nations vanished completely with Italy's successful absorption of Ethiopia. In March, Hitler brazenly repudiated the Locarno agreements and demonstrated again that the schedule of international aggression outlined in Mein Kampf was to be taken literally. And in the summer, civil war broke out in Spain. All these events produced an increasingly fatalistic tone in F.D.R.'s letters to his ambassadors.

Never one to give way to despair, he continued to search actively for a means by which to halt the march toward war within the limits set by the fiercely isolationist mood of the American people, and he asked his ambassadors to sound out the European capitals concerning the possibilities of an international conference.

1936 was an election year. F.D.R. inclined to the belief that the forces imperiling international peace were blood brothers of the power-seeking minority that was at war with the public interest in this country. In this view he was seconded by his ambassadors, particularly Dodd in Berlin and Claude Bowers in Spain.

F.D.R. to John Cudahy in Warsaw.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Jan. 21, 1936

Dear John:

Your letter of January third goes along with my own basic thought in regard to the broad problem of our neutrality. Everywhere people ask me—"If there is a European war can you keep us out of it"—and I tell them that I can and will if the people of the Nation back me up.

Things over here are getting on well in spite of surface troubles. The people are all right and I hope Congress will act quickly and get away before the Conventions.

My warm regards,
Always sincerely

Ambassador Cudahy had reported that the application of an embargo, under the Neutrality Act of 1935, on Italy and Ethiopia had given us an enviable moral leadership, since the embargo had been more damaging to Italy with its mechanized army than to the primitively equipped Ethiopian forces.

F.D.R.'s letters of this year reflected his efforts to square the isolationist approach of neutrality with American obligations to help prevent the spread of war.

F.D.R. to Jesse I. Straus in Paris.

THE WHITE HOUSE.
Feb. 13, 1936

Dear Jesse:

That is not only an intensely interesting letter of yours but also is proof positive that you can see the forest without being overwhelmed by the individual trees. In more pessimistic moments I have of necessity come to believe just as you do about France and the French future—yet I always say to myself that in previous parties France has always "snapped out" of it. This optimism, I must frankly confess, has little foundation because of several well-known incidents in the past one hundred and fifty years where revolution or its equivalent and the emergence of some strong individual have proved the only salvation.

One cannot help feeling that the whole European panorama is fundamentally blacker than at any time in your lifetime or mine. In 1848 revolutions in a dozen countries synchronized because of a general European demand for constitutional representative government; but at that time economics, budgets, foreign exchange and industrialism were not in the picture and the problem was ten times more simple than it is today. In 1914 the situation was eighty percent military, and again vastly simpler than today.

As I have told you, I have been increasingly concerned about the world picture ever since May, 1933. There are those who come from England and France and Germany who point to the fact that every crisis of the past three years has been muddled through with a hope that each succeeding crisis will be met peacefully in one way or another in the next few years. I hope that point of view is right but it goes against one's common sense.

The armaments race means bankruptcy or war—there is no possible out from that statement.

You are in the best listening post in what may be the last days of the period of peace before a long chaos, and I am very happy, indeed, to have your careful judgment after these two and a half years of observation.

Those articles and the letter from England are correct proof of the British dilemma. Heaven only knows I do not want to spend more money on our Army and Navy. I am initiating nothing new unless and until increases by other nations make increases by us absolutely essential to national defense. I wish England could understand that—and, incidentally, I wish Japan could understand that also.

My warm regards to you and Mrs. Straus. Keep up the good work.

Always sincerely,

This letter was in response to a lengthy letter in which Ambassador Straus gave his impressions of France after two and one half years. Everywhere, he said, he found intellectual and moral decay, venality and fear reaching into the very heart of the nation. Business was rotten while there was constant fear of Germany; the air force was insignificant; tax evasion was widespread; the politicians were a craven lot. He feared that some catastrophe was bound to happen.

The "British dilemma" was the need to stand up to the aggressors on one hand, and the weak state of British armament on the other. The rest of the paragraph relates to continued British annoyance at our decision, taken earlier, to build up our Navy to treaty limits.

F.D.R. to Breckinridge Long in Rome.

THE WHITE HOUSE.
Feb. 22, 1936

Dear Breck:

I have not written to you for ages, but I am very glad to have had your most interesting letters. I quoted your letter about the Embassy to Bill Phillips and inclose the memorandum from Carr. You will doubtless hear from Phillips.

We all watch the daily news from Europe with, I think, the feeling each day that the next will bring a major explosion. On the other hand, day succeeds day without anything happening so some people are rather definitely concluding that each recurring crisis will iron itself out and that nothing really serious will happen. I cannot wholly share this optimism.

Here at home things are going extremely well from the point of view of business, though the papers are against us from the political angle as well.

That leads me to the question of your return. As you know, I want you here during the whole of the campaign. I hope, too, that Bowers and Bullitt and probably Cudahy among the Ambassadors and two or three among the Ministers will do likewise. This involves resigning, because all of us here are agreed that it is not wise to retain the titles and be active in campaign work. You know, and the others too, that after November I shall want you again to be part of the Administration! I hope, therefore, that you will make your plans to come back at such time as suits you this spring.

We are facing a very formidable opposition on the part of a very powerful group among the extremely wealthy and the centralized industries. Ours must be a truth-telling and falsehood exposing campaign that will get into every home. You can be extremely useful in this.

I hope your "tummy" is all well again and that you are ready for one-night-stands and ham and eggs and coffee.

As ever yours,

Ambassador Long had suggested that the magnificent house he was living in, the Villa Taverna, be acquired for an ambassadorial residence, and that the cost be deducted from the war debt owed us by the Italians. If the Italians could be induced to pay part of their war debt in this way, wrote Long, it would break the solid front in Europe on the matter of war debts.

Wilbur J. Carr was Assistant Secretary of State, charged with general administration.

F.D.R. to Edward L. Roddan.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
March 3, 1936

Memorandum for Edward L. Roddan:

Please talk with me at your convenience about a Life of Governor Landon. F.D.R.

Edward L. Roddan, formerly White House correspondent of the International News Service, had joined the staff of the Democratic National Committee. Alf Landon was even then the leading contender for the Republican nomination. The Roosevelt forces regarded Landon as the easiest Republican to defeat, and hoped he would get the nomination. The "Life of Landon" was to show that the Kansas Governor had gone far beyond the New Deal in his demands that the Federal Government provide relief and help to meet depression conditions in the farm States. The Landon life was compiled and used effectively by Democratic speakers.

F.D.R. to Anthony J. Drexel Biddle in Oslo.

THE WHITE HOUSE.
March 12, 1936

Dear Tony:

That is an extremely interesting letter of yours of February twenty-fourth. I am glad also to have the picture of the European scene as you get it. Within the last few days Germany has again thrown a bombshell.

It is fine to know that you will be back for the Convention. Things political are going, on the whole, very well.

My warm regards to you both,
Always sincerely,

Minister Biddle's report, based chiefly on discussions in banking and industrial circles, said that the Franco-Soviet Pact and the announcement of rearmament programs on the part of England and Russia had jolted inner government circles in Germany and strengthened the position of Germany's general staff against adventurism. Within a fortnight after Biddle's letter was written, Hitler marched his troops into the Rhineland. It is now known, however, that he did this over the opposition of many of his generals.

F.D.R. to William E. Dodd in Berlin.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
March 16, 1936

My dear Dodd:

I think the idea of exchanging the burned-out palace for something more business-like and less ostentatious would be a good thing and I have so informed the Secretary and Phillips and Moore.

If we could make the exchange on the basis of actual going values and really get a place where everything would be concentrated in a reasonable location, there would be no difficulty in obtaining the necessary legislation.

Since you wrote on March third everything seems to have broken loose again in your part of the world. All the experts here, there and the other place say "There will be no war." They said the same thing all through July, 1914, when I was in the Navy Department. In those days I believed the experts. Today I have my tongue in my cheek.

This does not mean that I am become cynical; but as President I have to be ready just like a Fire Department!

If in the days to come the absolutely unpredictable events should by chance get to the point where a gesture, an offer or a formal statement by me would, in your judgment, make for peace, be sure to send me immediate word. But the peace must be not only peace with justice but the kind of peace which will endure without threat for more than a week or two.

As ever yours,

Dodd's letter had been a resume of the blunders committed by the great nations since 1920, starting with our own refusal to give the League of Nations a trial in 1920, and ending, "I hardly know which people have acted more stupidly . . ." The reference to the "burned-out palace" was the President's reaction to Dodd's suggestion that instead of spending a million dollars to rehabilitate the Bluecher palace, which at that time housed the embassy, the United States exchange the palace for a more usable building.

Re-Examinationists

Secretary Acheson chose a very poor mask for his criticism aimed at Senator Taft. In response to Mr. Taft's declaration that "only an idiot would be an isolationist today," the Secretary ironically agreed that all isolationists are as extinct as the dodo, but said a new species has come on the horizon. This new species he calls "the re-examinationist," defining a re-examinationist as one who "wants to re-examine all our policies and programs" dedicated to the cause of peace and freedom. From the general tenor of his remarks it is evident that he regards the "re-examinationists" as isolationists in disguise.

The phrase is especially unfortunate because the outstanding re-examinationist at the moment is Mr. Gordon Gray who was assigned to that task by the President. In his report released last week Mr. Gray directed attention to the economic revolution that has come about since the invasion of Korea. Instead of cautioning against any revisions, he pointed out that "we have now entered a new phase of foreign economic relations." The defense program, he said, means expanded purchasing of raw materials and manufactured goods from other countries. As a result more dollars are becoming available through trade channels to the rest of the world. "The rapid elimination of our export surplus in recent months," he reported, "is a reflection of some of these trends." Because of these changed conditions the Gray report repeatedly emphasizes that "major adjustments are needed in some of our own national policies."

In accepting the Gray report the President recognized that the rearmament program has "created major changes in the immediate outlook for the world economy." ECA is also alert to the need for re-examination of its programs. It is highly improbable that Secretary Acheson was taunting Mr. Gray, the President and the ECA, but his careless choice of the "re-examinationists" as a target leaves his speech open to that interpretation. To be sure, there are some re-examinationists who would like to wreck the whole policy of cooperation among the nations of the free world. They could be properly labeled obstructionists. But when the Secretary of State denounces all those who wish to re-examine existing policies and programs in the light of present realities, he certainly discourages the unity that is needed for the development of a strong bipartisan foreign policy.

National Conventions

As talk about the 1952 elections begins to warm up, the national convention system of nominating presidential candidates is again under fire. "The National Convention, as at present constituted and operated," says the group of experts who recently studied the subject for the American Political Science Association, "is an unwieldy, unrepresentative and less than responsible body." Similar criticism has been heard at least since the days of Woodrow Wilson. Yet the national conventions continue to operate in the same old way for want of a few strong hands to initiate the desirable reforms.

The most notorious defect is the inequality of representation. The expert study referred to above shows that in the 1948 Democratic National Convention each delegate from Illinois represented 33,245 Democratic voters; those from Vermont, 7443 Democratic voters; and from South Carolina, 1721 Democratic voters. In the Republican National Convention of the same year New York had one delegate for every 29,290 Republican voters; South Carolina one delegate for every 894 Republican voters; and Mississippi one delegate for every 630 Republican voters. Even when allowance is made for the small vote in the one-party States of the South, this inequality is extreme. Added to this is the fact that in a majority of the States delegates to the national conventions are selected by State conventions. Obviously the decisions of bodies so constituted may be far removed from the wishes of the rank and file of party membership.

Back in 1913 President Wilson asked Congress to set up national presidential primaries for the selection of presidential candidates, leaving the conventions only the task of declaring the results of the primaries and adopting the party platform. Today the tendency of political scientists is to work for reform of the convention system without changing its function. The APSA experts suggest that the conventions be reduced to about half their present size so as to encourage deliberation and more frequent meetings. They would have from 300 to 350 delegates to each convention directly elected by party voters. National committeemen, State party chairmen and congressional leaders would swell the membership by about 150, and 25 additional prominent party leaders outside the active organization would complete the list of delegates. These streamlined bodies would meet at least once every two years to write party platforms and (in presidential years) nominate candidates.

The plan has the advantage of giving control of the convention to the rank and file in addition to promoting party cohesiveness. It would enable party members to rout the bosses who often dictate the choice of convention delegates. The people would not think of letting party bosses cast their votes in the final election. Why should they be less concerned about undemocratic methods in the nomination of presidential candidates? It is not to be supposed that the system can be reformed before the next conventions meet because of the numerous State laws that will have to be modified, but a strong campaign to bring about these changes is long overdue.

Political Risk

To the Secretary of Commerce it seemed no longer expedient to keep Michael Lee on the department payroll; so the Secretary ousted him. That is the long and short of the involved Lee case, and Mr. Sawyer would have appeared a great deal more honest and respectable if, having cleared Mr. Lee of disloyalty, he had simply accepted his resignation or had dismissed him on frank grounds of political expediency. As it is, he has inflicted wanton injustice on an employe and has seriously undermined the President's loyalty program.

On two occasions in the past, Secretary Sawyer has examined Mr. Lee's record and determined that no security restrictions should be imposed upon him. In August, 1949, the Commerce Department Loyalty Board cleared Lee of disloyalty charges. But in May of this year, after Senator Malone had made a public attack on the economist, the Secretary requested his resignation. Lee refused to resign under fire. A new loyalty investigation resulted in an adverse finding by the Commerce Department Board. Now the Secretary has reversed the board but has let it be known at the same time that Lee would be dismissed as a security risk. The effect of this is to keep Lee from exercising his right of appeal to the Civil Service Commission Loyalty Review Board. It is hard to escape the conclusion that Mr. Sawyer did this because he feared that the review board would upset the judgment of the departmental board.

The President stated a double aim in establishing the loyalty program: (1) that "maximum protection must be afforded the United States against infiltration of disloyal persons into the ranks of its employes," and (2) that "equal protection from unfounded accusations of disloyalty must be afforded the loyal employes of the Government." Secretary Sawyer has completely frustrated the second aim in the Lee case. It affords scant protection from unfounded accusations of disloyalty to give an employe a technical loyalty clearance and then fire him as a "security risk."

It may seem advantageous to Secretary Sawyer, as a matter of crass expediency, to get rid of an employe who is a target of congressional attacks. But in the long run this will not prove an expedient personnel policy. The Secretary of Commerce has now made it known that the tenure of his employes is at the mercy of any congressional exponent of McCarthyism. He is unlikely to maintain much morale among his subordinates by such an outright abdication of responsibility.

If the authority to dismiss employes summarily on security grounds is commonly abused in this fashion, the loyalty program will soon be utterly bankrupt. The situation points anew to the need for an impartial study of the whole security-loyalty problem by an independent citizens' commission. We urge the President again to adopt this sound device as means of restoring justice, decency and sanity to a now crumbling civil service system.

Guatemala Results

Election of Col. Jacobo Arbenz as the new President of Guatemala hardly can be described as a political upset. Colonel Arbenz, one of the survivors of the military junta which paved the way for President Juan Jose Arevalo six years ago, had the support of the Revolutionary Action Party (which in turn controls the election board), the Communists and the Communist-dominated labor unions, the controlled press and, unofficially, of the army and the government itself. His principal opponent, Gen. Miguel Ydigoras Fuentes of the Democratic Union Party, had been driven underground. A previous rival, Col. Francisco Arana, one of the other members of the 1944 junta, had been bumped off in July, 1949, and there were dark hints that Arbenz knew something about it. In short, his election was about as sure a thing as anything can be in the tempestuous run of Latin American politics.

From the standpoint of Guatemala-United States relations, the test of the Arbenz regime is likely to be his attitude toward the Communists, who pursue a troublesome and vigorously anti-American line. Although the Communist Party as such is outlawed, Guatemala is the principal hot spot of communism in the hemisphere. The Communists have taken over the unions and have exerted a strong influence on the government, although of late President Arevalo has shown some inclination to stand up to them. Recently one union managed to throw out its Communist officers, and this ouster could become a precedent for more firmness in the government, particularly as Colonel Arbenz has such widespread support. The aim is one to be fostered and encouraged by American officials in Guatemala.

Tibetan Plea

The feeling is growing in Lake Success that what the Tibetans call the "sneak invasion" of their country requires the U. N. attention that the Tibetans request. The plea is a moving one, but it is impossible to see what can be done about it. The fact that Tibet is a nonmember nation is not, of course, the determining factor. The real complication arises from the fact that Tibet is not an independent state, but, juridically, is in a sort of dependent relation upon China. The circumstances of the attack are as unclear as everything else about the Forbidden Land.

The Tibetans put their status in this way: "In 1914 it was British persuasion which led Tibet to sign a treaty which superimposed on her the nominal (noninterfering) suzerainty of China, and by which the Chinese were accorded the right to maintain a mission in Lhasa, though they were strictly forbidden to meddle in the internal affairs of Tibet." Even this relation is regarded by the Tibetans as nonenforceable because the Chinese did not accept it. The reason is simple; the Chinese have always claimed Tibet as a part of China. Another complication, it is said, is that the United States in one or other treaty with China has agreed with China, and regard China as the sovereign power. If this is the case, then it would be difficult for the United States to associate itself with a resolution condemning Chinese aggression. How can you aggress internally?

The Tibetans say that the Chinese have transgressed a solemn assurance which they gave to the Indian government. This is rebutted in the Chinese reply to the second Indian protest to Peking. The Peking regime insists that a warning of its intentions toward Tibet was communicated to India on August 31. This notice was intended as a reminder to the Indian government that a Tibetan delegation to Peking, then in India, should hurry up. Tibet is quite inaccessible in the winter months, and, if any "liberation" were contemplated, an expedition had to start before October. Why the Tibetan delegation dallied is explained in the Tibetans' plea to the United Nations. The Lhasa government says, "It is unfortunate that the Tibetan mission to China were unable to leave India through no fault of their own, but for want of British visas, which were required for transit through Hongkong." Why this delay has not been stated. However, the Tibetans say that because of it the Peking regime expressed itself as quite content with preliminary negotiations with the Chinese Ambassador in New Delhi.

Of present interest is the first announcement in public of Peking's policy toward Tibet. It is that local autonomy will be granted, though it may be doubted whether it will be under the Dalai Lama. The Panchan Lama, who is said to be in the train of the invaders, has always been favored by the Chinese, and he may be installed at the Potala. It would thus be well to wait till facts as well as intentions are clearer before jumping in with any resolution.

Gettysburg

On November 19, just four score and seven years ago, President Abraham Lincoln dedicated the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Pa. The most costly and brutal civil war in history was at its climax then. The President, burdened with all the responsibilities of waging war for preservation of the Union, may well have regarded the ceremonial of the day as an intrusion on more vital tasks. He is said to have jotted down the remarks he would make while on his way to the battlefield. In any case, he was not to be the principal orator of the occasion. His speech was no more than about 140 words in length. But Edward Everett, who delivered the main dedicatory address wrote to Mr. Lincoln subsequently: "I should be glad if I could flatter myself that I came as near the central idea of the occasion in two hours as you did in two minutes."

The President's words expressed not only the central idea of the occasion with an eloquence perhaps unmatched in English prose, he also expressed the central idea of the struggle testing whether a nation "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal" could long endure. The ideas conveyed in the Gettysburg Address were not novel; like the ideas conveyed in the Declaration of Independence, they were familiar to those who heard them, and their virtue lay in their rendering of what Jefferson called "the common sense of the subject." Lincoln phrased that common sense with a compactness and simplicity that made it meaningful and has kept it so ever since. He saw the United States not as a geographical entity but as a great experiment. And he recognized that devotion to that experiment was, and must always be, the core of American loyalty.

RIVERS OF LIGHT

I shall go up into the morning; I shall wash myself there,
Bathe myself in the rivers of light.
Truly the dawn is a river of glad water.
It pours like a fountain over the world;
It becomes a deep sea.
Beside the islands of bird-song
And coasts of the trees and capes of wind,
I must rise out of the night to swim in it—
Out of the dark house of the earth
And the narrower houses of men's thoughts.
I shall leap up and cover every part of me
With the quivering waves that run from the sky.
I shall set my sail across it,
With the flags of air promising a fair voyage.

"Air Support"

I have read with a great deal of interest the editorial "Air Support" in The Post Wednesday, November 15. I am greatly disturbed by this further evidence of fuzzy thinking by your editorial commentators on national defense matters, with particular regard to the concept of a balanced force. The term "balanced forces" is misused, in my opinion, in this as well as in many other articles. It has generally come to mean what the particular writer considers to be the correct distribution of money to the armed forces, without having any basis of fact, and without reference to the mission presented to the armed forces. Obviously, the correct balance of forces is determined by the collective mission of the armed services, which is dictated by national policy. It is clear that the Air Force was considerably more ready to carry out immediate action at the outset of the Korean war than the Army, and yet it is the Air Force who is accused of imbalance. It is important to remember that air power in the battlefield is employed in a supporting role, and to accuse it of being inadequate because it cannot replace ground troops is specious.

The allegation that the Air Force "overstress on strategic bombing" could have had a part in inviting the Korean action is particularly distressing, since it implies, by default, that military decisions have been responsible for this Nation's weaknesses in the face of Russian aggression.

Although the Air Force could have provided more tactical air support groups in lieu of strategic bombardment groups and thus have been able to fight better in Korea, it appears to be obvious that we would then have invited a major attack on this country. Would this have been preferable?

Peace Gesture

What can be done in this hour of world upheaval to center the thoughts of the teeming millions upon God as the only source of peace? Perhaps even the little things of life may help, a grain of mustard seed, as it were.

We are approaching a Christian festival through which we glorify the birth of the Prince of Peace. Even in so small a matter as the sending of greeting cards, could not we stress the true meaning of this greatest event in history by sending only sacred cards which bear upon His birth?

If through these cards men could again know the joy of the angel host which proclaimed His birth, the faith of the wise men and the shepherds who sought and found Him, and the true worship through which they gave of their best to Him, a new day might be born to us.

I veritably believe that if every true Christian would follow this procedure in sending greeting cards, it would be another link in the great peace chain being forged by the Christian peoples of the world.

"The Age Factor"

In reading over your editorial of November 9, I wish to point out a few facts about a person's thinking ability regardless of his age. One cannot generalize on the word "retirement." Some men find it necessary to retire at 60 because of a strenuous life and many past responsibilities, while many of our greatest men have proven to able thinkers at the age of 90 and over.

It all depends on the individual. And, in my estimation, if a man has enough initiative, intelligence, and aggressiveness to want to run for an office at the age of 74—more power to him!

Party Machines

I am interested to know why The Washington Post assumes editorially on November 10, 1950, that every Democrat who runs for office in Montgomery County wears the collar of the so-called "E. Brooke Lee machine?" Why do you not say, with equal truth, that Montgomery County remained in the hands of the Republican-Coalition Frederic P. Lee machine?" How powerful must a "machine" become before it admittedly is a machine to The Washington Post.

"No More Isolationists"

It is time to remove the word "isolationist" from our vocabulary—if not from the dictionary. There is no such animal today.

Mr. Truman's one solution for every problem is to give money (more and more money) away, whether wise and necessary or not. If Mr. Taft (or other Republican) questions the wisdom, or the amount— often excessive, of some give-away program—or wants a quid pro quo for what we spend, he is promptly labeled—or should it be libeled—an "isolationist." Since when have prudence and common sense become "isolation?"

We cannot raise the living standard of the whole world without sacrificing our own. We cannot arm the whole non-Communist world without leaving ourselves defenseless.

It is time to recognize the inescapable fact that our give-away methods are wrecking the value of our own dollar, and causing dangerously increasing inflation at home.

Let us, at least occasionally, get something of value for what we spend. If that is "isolation"—may we all become "isolationists"—and soon.

The election returns may be saying "perhaps we have."

Importance Of Propaganda

The importance of propaganda in any war, hot or cold, cannot be overemphasized. "There are only two powers in the world: the sword and the spirit," said Napoleon. "In the long run, the sword is always defeated by the spirit."

This is emphatically the case in the present world-wide conflict between the forces of democracy and those of totalitarianism. It is a war of ideas as well as explosives, and its objective is to convince the underprivileged of the earth that they should embrace either democracy or communism. Guns can halt the physical advance of Communist-led soldiers—they can never halt "the march of an idea," however erroneous.

In this war the side which uses words most effectively will triumph if the words are implemented by constructive action. The Russians know this—their appropriation for propaganda is greater than for any other item except armament. Since 1917 they have fought their major battles for the spread of neo-Marxism not with bombs but with words, not with guns but with verbal butter.

On our side we have been slow and reluctant to accept propaganda as a respectable and indispensable weapon — "propaganda" has long been a "bad" word in our vocabulary. Even today, as our State Department admits, we spend less in this field each year than does General Motors for its public relations. And because of an instinctive aversion to the employment of propaganda in world politics, we have neglected to train ourselves in its use.

The result? Up to now we have been losing the war of words. We have been placed, and kept, almost continuously on the defensive. A war cannot be won by defensive tactics alone.

Our selling campaign for the democratic concept has largely failed to reach its audience, partly for lack of funds, partly for lack of a grand strategy and the expert personnel to implement it. With all respect for their earnestness, those charged with operating our propaganda machine have not displayed a sufficient comprehension of the European and Asian mentalities. There is reason to believe that much of our barrage of words goes far over the heads of the depressed masses and bounces off the hard skulls of their masters.

We are the world's acknowledged leaders at selling gadgets, but we are laggard in selling democracy, perhaps because we are not ourselves entirely clear about the sales arguments for the product. To an intellectual, democracy means human rights and fundamental freedoms—free elections, free speech, and the like. But to an Asiatic who has never known civil liberties and whose greatest concern is keeping body and soul together, such talk is meaningless. He wants to know which system is going to keep him fed and clothed and housed and bring about an improvement in his condition. His requirements are fundamental: our propaganda to him must be equally basic. To win the underprivileged masses to the ways of free men and in so doing to pull the fangs of totalitarianism, requires the application of the best brains backed by sufficient money.

What is specifically indicated is a new Government department or other agency of Cabinet stature, responsible directly to the President, as is the Economic Cooperation Administration, and closely coordinating its activities with the State Department. Its purpose should be to conduct an effective and amply financed world-wide propaganda campaign. It should be the sole governmental agency in this field. It should have teams of genuine experts and native talent in the sensitive political centers of the world, shock troops who are familiar with the enemy's spiritual terrain and his methods of warfare, and who know what words will be most effective in winning away his support among the underprivileged. It should be represented by a full-time attache in every American legation and embassy. It should supervise directly such material as publications, films, radio, etc., transmitted abroad by our Government. It should be headed by a man of unquestioned intellectual integrity and supreme intellectual capacity in the field of public relations, supported by the best staff obtainable without recourse to stuffed shirts or journalistic lame ducks.

The only way to win a war is to fight it; the only way to win a war of words is to produce and disseminate more and better words. We cannot lick communism by wishful thinking.

Situation Is Tense In Asia

By Andre Visson

Washington Guessing

WHAT IS Red China up to? This question is being asked with growing concern in Washington and with even greater concern in western European capitals. The proper answer to this question is of direct and immediate importance to Americans, whose men are fighting in the sub-zero weather of Korea. There are few Europeans in Korea. But if the thought that Chinese intervention in Korea may lead to another world war is hateful to us, to Europeans it is positively nightmarish. To the British it means devastation and ruin. To continental Europeans it means all that, plus slavery under Red occupations.

Europeans have no illusions on this. And no less a military authority than Gen. Omar N. Bradley, speaking this week before the Associated Press Editors Association in Atlanta, recalled that when we became committed in Korea we were left without an adequate margin of military strength with which to face an enemy at any other specific point. In the military sense, said General Bradley, "the free world was left without adequate reserves, except for the atomic bomb." Fortunately, the atomic bomb reserve is believed to be large enough to make Stalin and his henchmen hesitate about starting an all-out global war.

Apparently believing that behind the Manchurian border they are immune to our bombing, they are sending both ground troops and Soviet-made planes and jets over that border. This is an intolerable situation. It cannot go on. Everyone agrees that it must be stopped and as quickly as possible. But how can it be stopped? And can it be stopped without involving us in an all-out war with Red China?

OPINION IS divided. This is only too natural, since the intelligence reports and the estimates of Chinese motives are themselves divided. Nobody in Washington or Tokyo can tell with any certainty what the Chinese are up to. But the prevailing theory in official quarters is still that the Chinese are motivated primarily by fear. Should this really be the case, it is argued in official quarters, the best way to eliminate or reduce the danger would be to allay Chinese fears. This is what Secretary Acheson tried to do this week, giving new words of reassurance to Red China. Whether this reassurance will have the hoped for effect on the Chinese Communists may become apparent only when the representatives of Red China arrive at Lake Success.

For the time being, all that Secretary Acheson has achieved—judging by reports from London—was to reassure the British. Mr. Acheson is certainly facing an inhuman task. He is expected to reassure the Chinese Communists, the worried western Europeans, and the American critics of the present Administration's foreign policy in the Far East. It would seem impossible to assure all three groups at the same time and by the same words. So Mr. Acheson is having to do some tight-rope walking these days. How long he will be able to continue this is anybody's guess. President Truman is the one on whom the decision rests. But the Chinese Communists will greatly contribute to the decision by their attitude at Lake Success (if and when they get there) and even more, by their deeds on the Manchurian border.

It is a most unfortunate and very dangerous situation. In a parliamentary democracy it could be solved by a vote of confidence in parliament. But in a presidential democracy the Secretary of State can stay as long as he enjoys the confidence of the President, or as long as the President is willing to disregard the criticisms of the opposition.

MEANWHILE, Secretary Acheson, speaking for the State Department, and General Bradley, speaking for the Pentagon, are anxious to emphasize that the United States rejects the idea of a "preventive war" and that the "doors of negotiation must always remain open."

If Mao Tze-tung ever had any doubts about it, they should be dissipated by the official statements made this week. But if he is willing to have his representatives take advantage of the still open door, he would do well to realize that any unfortunate move by his diplomatic representatives, or by his soldiers in Korea will close the door with a bang.

While nobody, as stated above, can tell with certainty what Red China is up to, one thing is becoming clear. The immediate Soviet objective is to maintain such a situation in Asia as would prevent us from attaining our objective in western Europe.

General Bradley reminded us this week that this objective is the creation of a mutual defense for the North Atlantic Treaty countries. He reminded us—and our friends in western Europe—that we cannot defend the line on the Elbe without allowing the western Europeans—Germans included—to participate in that defense. One may wonder whether "allowing" is the proper word. Should he not have said "without imposing on all the people to be defended, including the Germans, the obligation to participate in that defense." General Bradley made it clear that he fully understands French apprehensions regarding the possible resurgence of a German army, but he emphasized that adequate safeguards, such as no German general staff and no German war machines, should allay French fears.

The tragic side of the situation is that the Red policy in Asia consists of making the Europeans believe that there will be no time—for establishing an adequate defense of Europe.

40 Germans Learn Democracy

By Drew Pearson

FORTY GERMAN farm kids, arriving in this country one year ago to study American farming, have just returned to Germany with an important lesson in American democracy.

They didn't learn about democracy from fancy colleges, but by rubbing shoulders with typical, down-to-earth Americans. For they were adopted for one year by rural families from such one-horse towns as Wapato, Wash.; Stuarts Draft, Va.; Accident, Md., and Tippecanoe City, Ohio. Now they are on their way back home to such one-horse towns as Bauberbischefsheim, Wionsheim, Oberspeltach and Ludwigsburg-Gruenbuehl, Germany.

This experiment in people-to-people friendship was sponsored jointly by the State Department and the Brethren Service Commission, a church group. Its success can be judged by the parting reactions of the German youth who stopped by the State Department en route home. In broken English, they talked of their experiences and impressions—and the story they will carry back with them to the German people.

"What does freedom mean to you?" a State Department spokesman asked the group.

Walter Rieth of Obesberken, Germany, who had been staying on a farm at Denton, Md., replied that freedom meant doing what you please. But Heinz Holder of Stuttgart, who had stayed at Broadway, Va., solemnly added:

"It means you can do as you please under the law if you show respect for others."

Then the State Department spokesman asked whether they found any advantages in going to an American high school.

Heinz Hilligardt of Pforzheim, who had spent his year at Mt. Solon, Va., pressed his big hands against his forehead in thought, then, groping for words, added: "The German high school has a wider range of subjects, except for such things as courses in secretary training and the like. Our schools go deeper into mathematics, history, chemistry and the like."

However, he thought the German schools concentrated too much on vocational training and not enough on getting along with people.

Rudolph Stahl of Westesbach, who lived on a farm near Dayton, Ohio, remarked that he wouldn't have a television set in his German home because it took up too much time. Oskar Rebbman, whose home is near Stuttgart, but who spent a year at Tippecanoe City, Ohio, admitted he was pop-eyed at the American combine machines. He hadn't seen any in Germany, but he thought the Germans got a better crop yield because they farmed more intensively.

Sun-tanned and healthy, dressed in simple farm clothes, these German youth agreed on one thing—they like Americans. Such people-to-people friendship probably does more good than a dozen diplomatic conferences. If we could bring about similar exchanges with Russia, we wouldn't have to worry about war.

TWENTY-TWO MONTHS ago, when the triumphant Democratic Eighty-first Congress roared into Washington amid shouts of "Happy Days Are Here Again," a forlorn Senator Robert Taft sat in his office.

Across the hall in the Republican policy chamber a band of GOP liberals determined to grab away his control. "The election shows Taftism has gone out of style," remarked their leader, Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts.

A bewildered and hurt Taft, hearing the remark, told a friend: "I don't understand why they say that about me."

The other day Bob Taft entered the same policy chamber to meet a crowd of newsmen. This Taft, winner by 430,000 in Ohio, was as jolly as a professional Santa Claus. He wore a gay tie obviously picked by a woman and a smile that stretched from ear to ear.

Asked about a special session of Congress, the Senator chuckled. "I can't tell what's on the President's mind," he said, and the reply brought as much laughter as a Fred Allen gag on television.

This Taft was mellow about questions which one year ago would have brought tart, rasping replies. Asked about the Gray report recommending expanded foreign aid, the Senator said mildly, "It goes further than I would."

But the climax, with a boyish Taft dissolving in blushes, came when he was asked if he were a candidate for President. Cautiously, the Senator read a statement saying he would not go after the nomination.

A voice in the crowd called out, "What if they give it to you?"

Robert Taft hung his head shyly for a minute, looked up into the full glare of the newsreel floodlights and blurted, "I'd take it." Then he blushed.

The crowd laughed with him, and everyone had as good a time as at a Saturday night church social.

MANY PATRIOTIC AMERICANS are walking the streets today looking for jobs simply because they are members of the National Guard or the Reserves.

This shocking fact was reported to President Truman by General Edward A. Evans, the able executive director of the Reserve Officers Association, after a three-week tour of the country. It is confirmed by letters and telegrams pouring in to the White House.

General Evans found that many employers—and the United States Government is the worst offender—will not hire men who are likely to be called to active service in a short time. Some typical cases are:

An experienced accountant in California has been told by a succession of personnel managers: "It would cost us $500 to train you for our company, and we run the risk of losing that investment after you are called."

A young contractor in the northwest had his bank loan canceled because the bank feared his company would collapse if he were called to duty.

Other National Guardsmen and Reservists are being passed over for promotions. Thousands of others are reluctant to commit themselves to buying a house, a new car or a television set until they know what the score is.

The solution the Reserve Officers Association put before the President is that the Defense Department immediately notify all Reserves and Guardsmen who will be called, then assure the others that they are not going back into uniform.

President Truman, a Reservist himself, was irate over this confusion and directed a note to Secretary of Defense George Marshall to remedy the situation.

The Magazine Rack

THE U. N. ASSEMBLY has become a sort of third House of Congress "destined somehow to supplement the inadequacies of the other two—for our Congressmen must now legislate about the world although they do not represent the world . . . Here our Government is accountable to the assembled representatives of the world. Far from controlling them, it frequently has to accept decisions that it hasn't foreseen and doesn't like . . . The American experience shows that the people, with their work and their votes, can take care of themselves in a fluid society, without a priestly, military or hereditary governing class. This time we are out to prove that other people can, in their own way, gain or secure their independence by undergoing the same experience."

These are the thoughts and remarks of Max Ascoli, writing in the new Reporter. Also in the current Reporter are stylishly written "profile" pieces on Harry Flood Byrd, by "Richard Cope," and on W. M. Kiplinger, the Washington oracle, by Dimitri Dejanikus.

"THE MEANEST MAN in Football" is the not altogether electrifying title of an article by Bill Fay in Collier's. The meanie is Ed Sprinkle of the Chicago Bears, an end given to stomping on the opposition with his cleats and by other means hospitalizing the enemy.

HERE'S A LADY, in Good Housekeeping, whose husband never buys her any Christmas presents that fit. Forever giving her nighties that look as though she'd "made a jump in a parachute that had failed to open." Virginia Taylor Klose is pretty cute about it all.

In another Good Housekeeping article, the Rev. John Scott of Cleveland Heights, Ohio, counsels parents, mostly fathers, to "Be More Than a Pal." Appears that some years ago Mr. Scott "gratuitously offered advice to parents who were perplexed by their children's behavior . . . Now I have my own children, and my attitude has changed appreciably." From time to time, Mr. Scott was commissioned to drive the kids to their varying destinations. "I used," he confesses, "to consider it my responsibility to chat with the young people about themselves and their hopes and ambitions. But not any more. Not after my young son said to his mother, 'I wish Dad would be like Nancy's father. All HE does is drive when he takes us anywhere in his car. He doesn't try to talk.'"

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER has another of her delightful reminiscences in the thick new New Yorker, and Berton Roueche is up with another of the Annals of Medicine stories. It's about trichinosis.

JOHN LARDNER gives all baseball fans to understand, in Newsweek, that the late Old Pete (nee Grover Cleveland) Alexander was "the greatest pitcher the National League ever had."

STILL ANOTHER report on Bernard Shaw is submitted—this one by John Mason Brown in the Saturday Review of Literature. Shaw was "an artist in spite of himself," Brown applauds. "He was the best, the sprightliest, the most deathless critic ever to have reviewed plays."

RUSSELL LYNES has a sharp and pleasurable essay in Life, called Snobs, a Handy Guide. It is based on his book, due this week for a dollar from Harper. Robert Osborn's illustrations are fine.

WILBERT McLEOD CHAPMAN, special assistant to the Undersecretary of State has got the homesickness. In the American magazine, he has written "I'm Going Back to Wonderland," the latter a great outdoors of tall trees, high crags, racing rivers and mountain meadows encompassed in the States of Washington, Oregon and Idaho. Chapman has the right idea, though he mistakenly refers to Utah's Bear River bird refuge as the Bear Lake refuge.

U. S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT asked most of the candidates in the recent election why they won or lost. Duff of Pennsylvania and Nixon of California, elected to the Senate, think the Administration's handling of Far Eastern policy put them in office. Myers, defeated in Pennsylvania, seemed stunned, wasn't sure just what hit him. Bennett, who beat Thomas for the Senate in Utah, thinks the Korean war and the Brannan Plan turned people away from the Democrats. Tydings of Maryland put his defeat down to a bad schism in the party in his State.

"IS MAN HERE TO STAY?" asks Loren C. Eiseley of the University of Pennsylvania in Scientific American. Professor Eiseley points out that throughout evolutionary history, dominant forms of life (like man) always have been supplanted. "'Unspecialized" forms (the oppossum and the ant) go on for eons. Thus, "if man can master quickly his individualistic propensities for destruction, he may be able to become another of the small immortals." Eiseley seems to indicate he wouldn't bet on man, however.

THE AMERICAN in Paris is a different party from what he was in the aftermath of World War I, or even than he was in World War II. Today he "insists on having his trousers pressed every day and he must have his daily bath," writes Robert Barrat in Commonweal. "All that adds to the renown of American democracy. We sense that here is a fully developed people—as far as habits go, at least . . . we are accustomed to the idea that Americans in general are studious, serious and methodical."

VOGUE carries a full-page picture of Ernest Hemingway, the author, bare to waist and drink in fist. Pappy looks a little out of shape.

A NEW BOOK called Masterpiece is dedicated to bringing "the great art of the ages into the library or living room of every American home." It costs a dollar. Current issue carries surprisingly good color prints by Renoir, Titian, Rembrandt, Breugel, Picasso, Van Gogh and at least a dozen others, and black-and-whites by Millet, Corot, Gericault and many more. Louis Zara is editor in chief.

FRUITCAKES are the key viand for the holidays among the Pennsylvania Dutch, according to Helen Papashvily, writing in Gourmet. Some beforehanded housekeepers do their cakes the week after New Year's "so they'll be well-seasoned for the following Christmas." Also, how to make Practical Rose Wine. Pour half a gallon of boiling water over two quarts of rose leaves. Then, "let stant a week, strain, at two pounds of sugar. Stant again 12 howers. Juck." Latter means, obviously, to put it in a juck—"a gallon juck, if you have one." There is also in Gourmet a slickly done piece by David Payne on how to cook bear meat.

SOMEBODY was prompted by the recent death of Jane Cowl to write about the Jane Cowl dahlia in Popular Gardening. The actress and the flower helped make each other famous, it appears, and each now has a permanent spot in her own sky where lesser lights have dimmed. "Ideal is the word for Jane Cowl," purrs the author.

Another little book, the Home Garden, tells how to build a four-way fireplace in your backyard. With working drawings.

Our Political Economy

Financial Crisis Hits Colleges

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

FACED with declining enrollments, a drop in Federal funds from GI scholarships and the prospects of renewed inflation, America's colleges and universities are in a financial crisis of major proportions.

Inflation has hit them as it hits all groups with relatively fixed incomes. On the one hand, costs have risen inexorably. On the other, revenues have lagged.

Private colleges have seen endowment income shrink as the Federal Government beat down interest rates, and taxes take much of the upper incomes which once went in gifts to higher education.

Public universities, which rely for their funds on State and local taxes, have felt the pinch from inflexible Government revenues.

The fact is that as a Nation we are today spending relatively only half as much of our national income on higher education as we did in 1932. Compare this figure with enrollment, which has doubled since that year, and the magnitude of the problem becomes clear.

OUR COLLEGES have met their predicament by unhappy expedients. The one they like least—and rely on most—is higher student fees.

In 1940, private universities got half their incomes from this source. By 1947 they were getting more than three quarters. Public universities, which in 1940 relied on student fees to cover only a fifth of their expenditures, by 1947 were relying on them for 35 percent.

Actually, the Federal Government was bearing most of the cost under the GI Bill of Rights. This softened the blow to the students, but it has left the future of college incomes very much up in the air. With GI enrollment down 33 percent this year from last, and future students subject to military service, what do the colleges do now?

The surprising fact is the degree to which they have been relying on Federal aid. In fiscal 1949, Federal outlays for education reached the amazing total of 3.4 billion dollars, 2.5 billion dollars through student aid and the rest through more than 200 separate research programs.

But not only is this assistance impermanent; the research program is haphazard and limited largely to military and technical research.

PRIVATE colleges have sought private solutions, with discouraging results. Those with endowment money have been shifting their portfolios from gilt-edged bonds to higher-yielding common stocks. Some have gone into business, such as New York University with its macaroni factory.

But such expedients have run into trouble. Rival businesses, jealous of tax-free competition, have forced an end to tax-empt status for college undertakings of this kind. College entry into the business field has probably aroused more ill-will than it has compensated in higher income.

Faced with the fact that Uncle Sam, not philanthropy, now has first call on large incomes, colleges have been passing the hat for small, continuing donations to pay their current bills. The statistical fact is that by 1942 three quarters of all contributions for educational and philanthropic purposes came from donors making less than $5000 a year. This means a lot more hustling for colleges which ask private benefaction.

NO ONE pretends that such expedients constitute an answer. More young Americans now want a college education than ever before. If their needs are to be met, we cannot rely on restrictive fees to meet the mounting cost of higher education.

The President's Commission on Higher Education thinks that increased enrollment should be provided at the local level by public junior colleges, and at the state level by very large universities whose size would make it possible to educate large numbers at low per capita cost.

Prof. Seymour Harris of Harvard University thinks there is considerable room in most colleges for economy of administration. He points out that Harvard spends much less of its income than the average college on such overhead as administration and operation of plant, with the result that it can channel its funds to such essentials as faculty salaries, library and research.

The United States Office of Education suggests Federal aid through 400,000 undergraduated scholarships and 37,500 professional fellowships, at an annual cost of 400 million dollars. This would provide Government-subsidized education for one sixth of present college enrollment at an outlay well below current levels.

Most private colleges do not want direct Federal subsidy, fearing censorship of teaching and ideas. On the other hand, scholarship money is generally acceptable to them.

At best, such expedients might ease the financial pains in a period of prolonged economic instability. A final solution will have to wait on a world where not only college administrators, but all people, can plan for the future with some equanimity.

Case of Thwarted Contributors

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

HELL HATH no fury like a contributor scorned, as the harrassed President Truman is now learning. Two of the most important contributors to his 1948 campaign are furiously battering on Administration doors, demanding their rights. The story of these frustrated contributors is worth telling, since it also tells a good deal about the Truman Administration.

One of the angry contributors is James Bruce, a New York businessman and a shrewd promoter. Bruce bet on Harry Truman when Truman was a very long shot indeed, by collecting a good deal of money for the Truman campaign in the summer of 1948. Ever since, he has been waiting impatiently to collect on the bet, by becoming American Ambassador in London. The second is Stanton Griffis, who has just resigned as Ambassador to Argentina, who was also generous in 1948, and who, therefore, considers that he has a lien on the Paris Embassy.

According to the strategy of the Bruce-Griffis axis, the recent election has presented a golden opportunity for the realization of expectations so long frustrated. For the fact is that Bruce and Griffis have thus far been blocked, not by President Truman, but by Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Undersecretary James Webb.

The most conspicuous diplomatic achievements of both Griffis and Bruce, who preceded Griffis as Ambassador to Argentina, has been the establishment of warm relations with Juan Peron, the Argentine dictator, and his rather uncharming wife, Evita. Acheson and Webb have opposed the appointments of Bruce and Griffis to the London and Paris posts on simple grounds. These grounds are that chumminess with a South American dictator, plus large campaign contributions, do not constitute sufficient qualifications for the two most important diplomatic posts in the gift of the American Government.

THE OPPOSITION of Acheson and Webb is the key to the anecdotes widely repeated in Washington, about James Bruce's interview with President Truman (at which, significantly, no third person was present). The interview took plaee when former Ambassador to England Lewis Douglas resigned. According to this tale, Truman rather mournfully informed Bruce that he had wanted to send him to London, but that "they" had insisted that he send instead "that telephone fellow"—the President could not remember his name. The "telephone fellow" was of course, Walter S. Gifford, now Ambassador in London, and "they" were chiefly Acheson and Webb.

Aside from "they," another obstacle has stood in the way of the triumph of the Bruce-Griffis axis. This has been the fact that the Paris embassy is now occupied by James Bruce's very able brother, David Bruce. David Bruce's competence is so universally recognized that Griffis' chances have been hurt. And James Bruce's chances for the London post have also been hurt, since it would be odd, to say the least, to have two brothers serving at the same time in the two most important American diplomatic posts.

Yet adherents of the Bruce-Griffis axis, said to include such powerful Democratic figures as the President's oilman friend, Ed Pauley, now believe that both these obstacles can be eliminated at one stroke. In the first place, it is argued, whatever President Truman may say, the elections make the departure of Acheson sooner or later inevitable, and Webb will depart with him. "They" will thus be out of the way. And if David Bruce is appointed undersecretary—a post for which he is, in fact, well qualified—he will be out of the way, too.

Griffis can then replace David Bruce in Paris, and after a respectable interval of four or five months, James Bruce can at last collect on his long shot by taking over from the "telephone fellow" (who is a Republican anyway) in London. Such is the neat solution now being hinted about, for the problems of the Bruce-Griffis axis.

WHETHER THE SOLUTION will work out as neatly as all that depends, of course, on President Harry Truman. And it is this which makes it worth recounting the case of the frustrated contributors. For a great deal will depend on whether Truman accepts the Bruce-Griffis solution.

After his surprise triumph in 1948, President Truman discarded the bipartisan foreign policy, placed all emphasis on domestic politics, let men like George Marshall, Robert Lovett, and James Forrestal go, and handed the Defense Department over to the biggest money-raiser of them all, Louis A. Johnson.

Truman, in brief, clearly decided that politics-as-usual was the receipt for success. Last November 7th the voters rejected this receipt. The fact is that in these times, politics-as-usual is not good politics. There are signs, including a number of his post-Korea appointments, that Truman now knows this. If he sends Bruce and Griffis to the vital London and Paris posts, solely on the basis of their labors in the rather grubby money-gathering political vineyard, it will show that the signs have been misleading. This is the real meaning of the case of the frustrated contributors.

The Gallup Poll

Pay-as-You-Go Arming Favored

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

SHOULD WE raise the money to pay for rearmament by stiffer taxes—or by borrowing?

This is one of the top questions which the newly elected Congress will have to face. Was the November 7 election a mandate of any kind on this point?

Just before the Nation went to the polls, the institute interviewed a cross-section of the electorate on the issue of heavier taxes as against borrowing money to pay for rearmament.

The results indicate rather clearly that the public is favorable to the idea of a bigger tax bite rather than an increased debt load to pay for defense.

The Question:

"Congress voted recently to increase Federal income taxes for all taxpayers. To pay the costs of the Korean war and our defense program, income taxes will have to be raised even more OR the Government will have to borrow money and go deeper into debt. Which do you think the Government should do—increase income taxes still more, or borrow more money?"

Increase taxes	51%
Borrow	26
Other answers	9
No opinion	14
	100%

The 9 percent "other" is made up mostly of persons who volunteered two types of answers— (1) tax business more, and (2) cut out wasteful Government spending.

One of the most important aspects of the survey is that persons in the upper income and education level, where the tax burden is particulary heavy now, show a higher ratio for increasing taxes than do persons in the lower economic levels.

In short, taxpayers themselves apparently would rather have a heavier tax load than see a heavier debt load saddled on the country.

This is shown in the vote by educational level, as follows:

	College	High School	Grade School
Increase taxes	65%	55%	44%
Borrow	15	24	30
Other answers	15	9	8
No opinion	5	12	18
	100%	100%	100%

The vote by occupation groups shows business and professional persons, white collar workers and farmers all favoring taxes by a higher proportion than manual workers do.

Earlier Institute surveys revealed a vote of about 2-to-1 in favor of freezing both wages and prices at present, and a vote of approximately 4-to-3 in favor of converting manufacturing industries to war production now on an all-out wartime basis.

Nearby Elections Affected Capital

By Harry N. Stull

THE RESULTS of the recent elections in nearby Maryland and Virginia are of particular interest to the people of the District.

The Arlington voters approved a bond issue for county sewage treatment facilities, an important step in eliminating pollution of the Potomac River. At the same time they rejected a proposal for a bond issue for school construction, which will probably result in half-day classes for several thousand children of the county and further crowd the already-overcrowded schools.

STULL

The results in Prince Georges County, where the apparently deeply intrenched political machine was ousted and several candidates were elected on a platform to clean up the professional gambling rampant in the county, came as a pleasant surprise to many District residents who had wondered at the inability of the people of Prince Georges to bring about law enforcement through their elected officers.

Of particular interest to Washingtonians was the campaign waged to amend the Maryland sales tax law and the subsequent action of the Legislature in raising the exemption and excluding from the tax any purchase of 50 cents or less. Since the District sales tax was to some extent modeled after the Maryland law, there is considerable speculation as to how this change will affect Washington merchants, especially those with stores near the Maryland line. Only time will tell whether a movement will develop to change our own law to conform to the Maryland law or whether the discrepancy between the laws will result in loss of business to District merchants.

Since District residents do not have the same means of deciding public questions as our neighbors, Congress will have to decide from the actions taken by Washington's civic organizations whether a change here is desired by the people. If it is the consensus that our own law should be amended, it is hoped that relief can be obtained from a Congress which has done absolutely nothing toward repeal of the personal property tax on household goods, upon which there is practical unanimity among District officials and residents.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Health Department, while showing an increase in heart disease and cancer (which together caused 45.9 percent of all deaths here in the year), showed a material decrease in maternal deaths, tuberculosis and pneumonia, and the campaign to vaccinate dogs reduced rabies deaths practically to zero. It also reported for the first time that ambulances carried internes, with the result that many emergency cases were treated on the scene and not taken to hospitals. This innovation was first urged by one of the citizens' associations and was concurred in by the Federation of Citizens Associations.

ONE OF THE MOST difficult problems in organizing for civil defense here is the lack of funds and the uncertainty as to when the needed money will be forthcoming. New York State appropriated 2½ million dollars for civil defense. An effort by District officials to obtain an initial appropriation of $290,000 from Congress resulted in the allowance of $100,000.

During the last war, an entire year elapsed after the formation of the civilian defense units before substantial aid could be obtained, either in the appropriation of District funds or in the allocation of Federal property. Volunteers in this service will be much more easily obtained if there is some assurance that funds will be available for the purchase of equipment with which to work.

IF, AS PREDICTED, the House District Crime Subcommittee proposes drastic changes in the criminal code, there will be much discussion among civic groups. There is pretty general agreement that something should be done along the lines suggested, but a good deal will depend upon the exact nature of the proposed changes, for a too drastic law would defeat the purposes of the proponents of a change. It seems, from the experience of other communities, that a habitual criminal law with teeth in it is badly needed here. Proposals to change the parole and probation systems may cause some controversy, however.

Bond Vetoes Leave Schools Stumped

By Benjamin Muse

THE RESULTS of recent referendum elections represented an abrupt reversal in voter reaction to school bond proposals in this State. Of the eight such proposals before Virginia localities, only one, the smallest, was approved. This was a $330,000 bond issue for the City of Hampton. Seven counties, including Arlington and Prince William, rejected proposed bond issues for school construction.

MUSE

Previously in 1950, nine counties and one city had voted school bond issues totaling $22,317,000. In 1949, nine bond issues totaling eight million dollars were approved, and in 1949 eight localities voted to issue $9,045,000 in school bonds. Only one school bond proposal had been rejected in three years—a $200,000 issue in Shenandoah County.

School authorities in the "No"-voting counties are now stumped. The P-TA in one such locality has appropriately scheduled as the topic for its next meeting: "What Next?"

The school Santa Claus, known as the State Literary Fund, has about emptied his sack. As of the end of last week, the Literary Fund had just $1,453,469 on hand with which to deal with $13,816,690 in approved applications for loans.

THE ADMINISTRATORS of the fund are also wrestling with this embarrassing question: In counties where the voters have just expressed disapproval of incurring bonded indebtedness, should school boards be permitted to incur indebtedness to the Literary Fund? Two such counties have applications for Literary Fund loans pending and others will doubtless now apply.

In York County, the voters rejected a $1,100,000 bond issue for a school construction project. Here it is reasonable to assume that the voters preferred an alternative proposal for the enlargement of one of the existing schools, for which a $55,000 loan has been applied for.

In Prince William County, however, the bond issue proposal and the Literary Fund applications were for the same school building program. To grant the money to the school board now by way of a Literary Fund loan would have the appearance of circumventing the expressed will of the voters of that county.

Which brings us to the question of Why is There a Literary Fund? The only answer that this column can give is the fact that there ALWAYS HAS BEEN a Literary Fund. As a source of loans, it offers no advantage over the open bond market—except in that it can be drawn upon without seeking the approval of the electorate.

THE LITERARY FUND in Virginia is as old as the public free school system—in fact, a little older. It was set up in 1810 as a depository for "escheates, penalties and forfeitures," to be used for the "encouragement of learning." Just where to apply the money was the subject of much discussion during the next few years. Then in 1818 a public school system was established, to be supported by $45,000 a year from the Literary Fund.

At first, the money in the Literary Fund was used for school purposes without distinction between principal and increment, and that was about all the schools got from the State. Not until 1860 was the present system adopted of lending the principal and using only the interest as a contribution to school operating expenses.

The Literary Fund has continued to receive all of the fines, etc., collected by the State, and they have reached a total of $18,956,989. Constitutionally, the General Assembly may divert any part of the fund above 10 million dollars to other purposes, but it has never done so. On the contrary, the General Assembly at its last session made a temporary transfer of 11 million dollars from the sinking fund to the Literary Fund—to be paid back to the sinking fund, however, by installments over a period of years.

The total in the Literary Fund, including sinking fund credit, is now $29,956,898. This is the present revolving fund for school construction loans, which are made at 2 percent. The Literary Fund, which once financed the whole school system, now contributes only the amount of this interest to the appropriation for teachers' salaries.

A Constitutional Quibble Revived

By James P. Connolly

ANY CHANCE that the Legislature might defy the vote in the recent general election for a constitutional convention is far-fetched, but it is not impossible. The Assembly has done it before and conceivably it could do it again.

CONNOLLY

For once again there is being heard the old question—just as though there were any doubt—whether a convention requires a majority of all the votes cast in an election or only a majority of those cast on the convention issue.

The State Constitution requires a referendum on the issue every 20 years. Twenty years ago, however, when the people voted clearly for a convention, the Assembly simply ignored the popular will and failed or refused to call one.

In its inaction, the Legislature had the dubious support of an opinion that a convention requires a majority of all the votes. Who the authority for the opinion was is no longer known, but it was not the Attorney General or the courts.

While the recent vote was overwhelming, the final decision is up to the Assembly, which must pass the legislation calling a convention. A committee to draft the bill, fixing the time and place and the manner of electing delegates, is being named now by Senator Sothoron (D., Prince Georges), chairman of the Legislative Council.

THE MEASURE will be submitted to the Assembly in January. If the Legislature chooses not to enact it, there is no power in law to compel it to do so. But if there is any power in logic and public opinion and any sense of duty and fair play in the Assembly, the legislation should have clear sailing. For the question whether a convention requires a majority of all the votes is only a quibble, based on an ambiguity.

In the article on conventions, the Constitution mentions a majority of the votes cast "at the election." But elsewhere in several places the Constitution makes it clear that this was hardly the intent—that the phrase "at the election" was probably a lapse of language.

For instance, in the article on "the referendum," the Constitution states specifically that if a majority of the votes cast for and against a referred law (not a majority of those cast in the election) are in favor, the referred law shall have carried.

Further, the Constitution provides at its very end for its own adoption by a majority of the votes cast for and against it (not a majority of those cast in the election). It was adopted in 1867 and has not been revised. No convention has been held since.

OTHER ARGUMENTS for a convention are endless. As for obligation on the Assembly, the Constitution consistently uses the language of mandate rather than discretion, stating that the Legislature "shall (not may) provide" for a referendum and "shall (not may) call" a convention.

Both party platforms in the recent campaign favored a convention, and Governor Lane, mindful of the legislative default of 20 years ago, guaranteed in a campaign speech that if a convention were voted, one would be held.

No other question submitted at the polls requires a majority of all the votes in the election, and if a convention really required it a convention would be practically impossible—because a majority of all the voters seldom vote on such secondary issues.

Finally, there is a legal precedent that a majority of all the votes is not required, but where is the precedent for the claim that a majority of all is required?

The precedent to the contrary is an opinion of the Maryland Court of Appeals, which held in a county case that a majority of all is not required. The appeals court said voters absenting themselves or refraining from the question were in effect acquiescing.

The vote for a convention in the last election was so one-sided that it is only good politics for the lawmakers to go along with it. Baltimore City and 17 counties voted for it. Only 6 of the smaller counties opposed it.

Throughout the State and in Baltimore City, the vote was three to one. In Montgomery County it was seven to one and in Baltimore and Prince Georges Counties, five to one.

The opposition of the smaller counties was perhaps only natural. One big purpose of a convention would be to equalize representation in the Assembly. As matters stand now, the smaller subdivisions have an advantage.

Representation in the party nominating conventions being the same as that in the Assembly, the smaller counties also have an edge there, and the public had a forceful demonstration in the last primary of how the disproportion can work to dissatisfaction.

The candidates who won the popular majorities in the Democratic gubernatorial and Republican senatorial primaries nevertheless lost the nominations—through the unit rule in the party conventions.

A constitutional convention that corrected the inequities in the Assembly would automatically correct those in the nominating conventions.

The Legislature is not required to vote for a revision of the Constitution but only for a convention. If the convention votes for a revision, the final say will be with the voters. Its adoption would have to be ratified by them.

A Brilliant Study of 'I's' and 'You's'

The Liabilities of Civilizing Man

By N. S. Haseltine

SPEAKING OF MAN. By Abraham Myerson, M.D. Knopf. 280 pp. $3.

PUBLISHER KNOPF tried for more than 17 years to get this book out of the brains of Abraham Myerson, rationally brilliant New England psychiatrist.

He never quite succeeded in getting the product the author wanted, for Myerson died September 3, 1948, his "This Is Man" book for the general public still unfinished.

MYERSON

But enough had been written, and revised at each new start, to produce this posthumous work, the crowning writing achievement of a learned man's life. It should prove itself an outstanding contribution to the increase of rational thinking.

"SPEAKING of Man" is no cheap exercise of the intellect; it is an honest, and rather pessimistic, study of the "I's" and the "You's" who have tenuously inherited this earth. And the latter may destroy the former and themselves before the conflict ends.

"To me," Myerson wrote, "man is a thickened node in the web of a universe of forces which, ever repetitively and ever anew, flow in and out of him . . .

"Within him there rages an inner turmoil made up of memories and especially words, the most important of which are 'I,' 'you,' 'we,' 'they' and, the most fatal, 'you,' when the man learns to address himself by this ominous term."

Expounding further on this sub-theme to his overall picture of man, Myerson sees hope in the development of human tenderness to individuals—nose-slitting and the chopping off of hands are no longer in style—but despairs at the concurrent development of "group ferocity."

"It is a curious anomaly, and one that strikes the heart with terror, that with the growth of individual tenderness man has developed the capacity and the will to destroy his fellowmen wholesale in a way unparalleled in all the sorry tales of man's history," he wrote.

TO SINGLE OUT threads in a book devoted to the skeins that make up man is unfair to the author. For Myerson, like the most illustrious predecessor his writing brings to mind, Montaigne the French essayist, touches on innumerable threads.

Some, in fact, many of his touchings arouse the reader, and may well outrage the prejudiced. The author, to put it more mildly than he did, doesn't see eye to eye with priests, preachers and moralists. He is more than skeptical of "authorities," even the authorities in his own profession, psychiatry.

Writing of his own experiences as "an authority," he states:

"When I was a young psychiatrist, father of one child, I loftily developed a lecture entitled, no less, 'A Decalogue for Parents.' Like a new Moses, I enunciated 10 commandments based on the successful rearing of son number one.

"Along came son number two, a nonconformist, who shattered my feelings of certainty. I changed the title of the lecture to 'Ten Hints for Parents.' With this modification of authoritarianism, I got along well enough until the third child was born, a girl; then I gave up the lecture entirely."

THE ABOVE perhaps best exemplifies the style of Myerson's opus, his success, generally, in writing in terms understandable to all. And the success is all the more real because he admittedly is discussing a subject no human can understand—man.

Myerson died at the age of 67, after a lifetime of successes and failures in unraveling the mental kinks of thousands of patients. No one man's lifetime, he acknowledged, can sift out more than a few of the forces of life. He proposes, in his book, that answers of real value might be found in a 100-year study of man and his hereditary forces.

Man, says Myerson, is united by the invisible strands of heredity to every form of life that ever lived; his fundamental drives and compulsive activities go back to the first piece of life that ever appeared on earth.

One of the tragedies of man is that he is enmeshed in the eternal battle between hidden desires and social permissions, and the conflict leads to mental disturbances. This will continue to be inevitable "until biological adaptation and social adjustment will receive impartial, clear-headed, modern consideration," he said.

BUT MYERSON isn't opposed to government and discipline. They are essential, he says, "lest men be plunged into habits of sensuality and disorganized yielding to impulse."

"I prefer civilization, with all its terrible cost, to raw animality . . . but the liabilities of civilizing the human being are very great indeed," he wrote.

"We need a way of life," he said in conclusion, "in which the animal, guided by reason, may romp but will not bite."

The Best Analysis Yet Of Red Military Might

By John Barkham

DEFENSE OF THE WEST. By B. H. Liddell Hart. Morrow. 335 pp. $4.

CAPTAIN HART remains one of Europe's leading military analysts, despite his pre-World War II prediction that defense would hamstring offense in that conflict. Since the end of the war he has spent much time consulting the German generals, which makes his present book doubly important, since the Germans are the only people who have had large-scale battle experience against the Red army.

Captain Hart is not sanguine about the chances of peace. They are balanced on a knife edge with the chances of war, he feels. "One may doubt whether any government wants another war, but it is hard to see how it can be avoided if the present tension persists." Hence he addresses himself to the two principal "x" factors in a possible conflict—the atomic bomb and the Russians.

As to the first, he naturally looks upon it through the eyes of a Briton, that is, from the point of view of a country certain to be atom-bombed and perhaps occupied before being liberated. However, since both sides have the bomb, it is conceivable neither may dare to use it.

His ideas on civil defense also go much further than ours on this side of the Atlantic. For example, he visualizes a series of air-conditioned honeycomb towns under the great cities, radiating from their subways. "To plan anything less," he explains, "would be trifling with the problem of national survival in an atomic war."

His analysis of the military strength of Russia is perhaps the most expert and cogent at present available to the general public, and, as previously mentioned, is based to a great extent on the actual battle reports of German commanders. His conclusion: "Everything you hear about the Russians is true—all the good things and all the bad things."

Russia's forces have the characteristics of both the primitive horde and the mechanized robot. But the Red army of 1949 is not the equal of the Red army of 1945, especially in leadership.

This is a top drawer book for the armchair strategist, particularly the kind who says: "Let's get it over with now."

Seeds of Treason

THE TRAITOR. By William L. Shirer. Farrar, Straus. 374 pp. $3.

WHAT GOES ON in the mind of a traitor? What prompts him to turn on his country—an ignoble idealism, or merely thwarted personal ambition?

Oliver Knight, Mr. Shirer's renegade, was driven by both of these motives. A so-so correspondent from the Midwest, he admired the Nazis for the efficient way they dispossessed the so-called intelligentsia, who were all "inferior" people. On a national scale, they were doing what he badly wanted to do to the editor who recalled him from Berlin when World War II broke out. Besides, there was the "Princess," his Nazi paramour, who ministered to his needs and buttered his ego—and diligently reported back to the Gestapo. It was the logical thing to go to work for the Nazis as a propagandist.

Perhaps it was inevitable that Mr. Shirer would write a novel like this. Here is the Germany he knew, the Nazi frenzies he reported first-hand, the traitors he observed with his own eyes. There is even something of himself in Jack Goodman, the American correspondent who saw from the start that the Nazis were heading into suicide like lemmings—and taking backsliders like Knight with them.

On the strength of this book it cannot yet be said that Mr. Shirer is a novelist. His story has form, pace and coherence, buttressed, of course, by authenticity of scene and incident. But its characters have a faintly unrealized air, as though their creator had not done quite enough to give them life. Nevertheless, "The Traitor" is miles ahead of the first novels perpetrated by some of Mr. Shirer's distinguished colleagues, who shall be nameless here.

HE FEEDS THE BIRDS. By Terence Ford. Dial. 288 pp. $3.

THE TIME of this novel is 10 years ago, the scene New York (mostly Greenwich Village), and the people in it a group of confused characters who gravitate uncertainly between high ideals and low living. Indeed, Mr. Ford's cast is a pretty raffish bunch whose natural habitat is either bed or bar. There are several sub-plots moving through the main story, but the overall impression is one of glib, amoral citizens on their way to no place. The author has an eye for detail and an ear for speech, but he tried too hard in this first novel. His next will probably be a good deal better.

Surprise!

Latin Grace Blends With An Irish Wit

A VARIETY OF FALLON. By Carlos Fallon. Little, Brown. 276 pp. $3.

BLENDING Irish wit and Latin grace, "A Variety of Fallon" is one of the surprise packages of the season.

Carlos Fallon, now an American citizen, traces his Irish blood to a great-grandfather who went from the Emerald Isle to Colombia in search of emeralds, and there married an aristocrat. On the other side of the family tree there was the Conquistadore, Don Gonzalc Ximenez de Quesada, marshal of the New Kingdom of Granada, and the little Indian girl whom as a knight of Spain he was not permitted to marry.

As for Carlos Fallon's parents, his father was reading aloud "Types of Neolithic Dwellings" when a chance observation was interpreted by the helpful lady as a proposal of marriage.

It was Carlos' father, incidentally, who in a discourse on an incident in the family history, observed: "You must bear in mind, my son, that when a man is in the habitual company of a woman, the first careless move on his part will sweep her off her feet."

Much of Fallon's own childhood was spent in Bogota, but when his father became consul general in New Orleans the boy had an opportunity to learn about the United States firsthand.

Whether spinning tales of his family and ancestors of his youth in New Orleans, his marriage, his experiences in the Colombian navy, his exposure to British naval ettiquete or duties in the American Air Force in World War II, Fallon is unfailingly entertaining.

The easy grace of the wit makes the book a joy. To fail to read it is a form of self-punishment.—L. G.

THE PRODIGAL HEART. By Susan Ertz. Harper. 320 pp. $3.

MISS ERTZ is by way of being something of an interpreter of English life for Americans. Her new novel, a more serious book than its title indicates, is primarily a romance, and secondarily an attempt to show what the changing flux of postwar English life is doing to its people. Her Medwin Blain is a war widow who becomes secretary to two well-to-do women, and then falls rather imprudently in love again. Miss Ertz writes with feeling and poise, but, understandably, her plot takes priority over her background.

THE GENTLEMAN AND THE JEW. By Maurice Samuel. Knopf. 352 pp. $3.50.

WITH the refounding of their homeland after 2000 years, the Jews have now altered their relationship with the rest of the world. In this scholarly survey, Mr. Samuel examines these changes and contrasts them with the traditional conception of the Jew as he knew it. The author is an authority in this field, and he writes with his customary weight and felicity.

SEA ROAD TO THE INDIES. By Henry H. Hart. Macmillan. 296 pp. $4.50.

DR. HART's book is an account of the voyages of the Portuguese navigators and in particular of Vasco da Gama. Dr. Hart writes a good story with

VASCO DA GAMA

BE MY LOVE. By Harriet Hinsdale. Creative Age Press. 376 pp. $3.50.

HARRIET HINSDALE, a former motion picture story editor, tells the tale of Sir Charles Henry Frankland, the aristocrat who becomes enamored of a tavern maid, makes her his ward and then his wife, to the titillation of Boston society. Final moment of this cloak and suitor is a ball at which Col. George Washington of Virginia and Ben Franklin appear on stage, and the onetime rival of Milady Frankland is appropriately discomfited. It is an old tale, that of Sir Harry and his Agnes; the present retelling has not improved it.

ROBIN ON THE RIVER. By Marjorie Hayes. Little, Brown. $2.75. 162 pp.

A MYSTERY STORY with a lot of river color for boys and girls from 7 to 11½. But not the kind of mystery story you hear on the radio. Much better than that. You keep wondering what is going to happen next and, "if you are reading in bed and it is past your bedtime, you just want to keep on reading and reading." This is what one little guinea-pig thought about this one.

A trained seal plays a big part in the solving of the mystery and is a perfectly credible character, it seems.

Our Schizophrenic Occupation

U. S. 'Saviors' of German Cartels

By Kathleen L. Barber

ALL HONORABLE MEN by James Stewart Martin: Little, Brown. 326 pp. $3.50.

THIS IS ONE of the more important books of our chaotic times. It sheds light on a phase of the German occupation that has hitherto been shaded, and on a struggle within AMG which may have most serious consequences in the future.

Mr. Martin belongs to the group of distinguished former public servants who have resigned from the American occupation staff in Germany because they were blocked in carrying out reform policies. In this book Mr. Martin, the first of the group to speak out so fearlessly, sets forth the sordid record of the way certain American business interests have thwarted economic reform of the Nazi industrial order.

If the German industrialists had been helpless or unwilling instruments in Hitler's hands, perhaps the indictment would not need to be so severe. But at every turn in his detective story search for documents in the wake of Allied armies in 1945, Mr. Martin found that, instead, Hitler was a tool of the cartel and banking giants.

THE GERMAN TRUSTS have won out through the schizophrenic character of the occupation under General Clay, which emerges clearly from this account. On the one hand, JCS 1067, the famous policy directive on Germany, and the Potsdam Agreement called for building a balanced German economy whose potential would be peace instead of aggressive war. To do this, the concentration of economic power in Nazi Germany's cartels was ordered destroyed and the development of light and consumer goods industries was ordered encouraged. These were the policies which the Decartelization Branch, with Mr. Martin as chief, tried to translate into action. These policies had the written support of General Clay.

On the other hand, the Economics Division of AMG was headed by Brig Gen. William H. Draper, jr., on leave from Dillon, Read, the investment banking firm which had contributed so heavily to the rebuilding of Germany's war potential the last time.

The Economics Division opposed decartelization, and supported recovery of heavy industry run by its former "efficient" managers. These policies have triumphed, Martin says, because General Clay did not halt the division's sabotage of American policy. In the end, Clay appears to have joined its forces.

THE DOWNWARD spiral occurred roughly this way:

1. Delay of reform was urged in the interest of recovery.

2. Then resources were channeled into rebuilding heavy industry while consumer goods industries for export could not get coal, and thus recovery was delayed.

3. When the export industries finally did get going, much of their product disappeared—and turned up on Germany's black market, thus aiding inflation and further impeding recovery.

4. Delayed recovery was then blamed on the "drastic reforms" which had actually never been put into effect.

The German industrialists proved to be so powerful, through their friends in AMG, that:

1. Factories chosen for dismantling were principally those of independent concerns rather than plants belonging to the combines.

2. Allocations of materials and the Nazis' licensing restrictions were used to keep out new concerns and independent businesses.

3. Continuance of large holding companies and interlocking directorates, and the issuance of "bearer" shares were tolerated.

4. Decartelization was finally limited to consumer goods industries only; heavy industry was not to be touched.

5. Regulatory powers over allocation and production were turned over to private industry associations.

THUS, Mr. Martin says, in the name of production and efficiency the German economy has been preserved virtually intact, but is neither very productive nor very efficient. In this picture there is no competition, no free enterprise, no social responsibility, no conclusion to draw except that we are repeating our post-World War I mistakes, but making them more quickly and more efficiently.

These facts should make Americans more cognizant of French reasons for not wanting to rearm western Germany. The danger of a German war machine once again turning on us either singly or in combination with Russia is obviously not a French fantasy.

This book will raise a storm in the high places of the business world and in certain Government circles. For it is thoroughly documented with names of individuals and companies that have participated in the negation of American aims in Germany.

There is still time, Martin says, to set the occupation straight if the influence of these cartel-minded forces, the "honorable men," can be eradicated from the Government.

Some Literary Pay-Dirt From Storied Comstock

COMSTOCK BONANZA. Edited by Duncan Emrich. Vanguard Press. 363 pp. $3.75.

FROM TIME to time in history, for no very explicable reason, a town or locality seems favored, even transiently, with an unexpected burst of talent.

Such a place was Virginia City, Nevada, less than a century ago a mining center whose life is the subject of Duncan Emrich's excellent anthology.

On the surface, the eight writers represented in the book were drawn by the Comstock Lode—but why, one may ask, there and not someplace else? To be sure, the talents vary in quality, and if the greatest of them—Mark Twain—flourished elsewhere, too, nevertheless Mark Twain was not everywhere in the West.

Twain, in his later twenties, spent three years there, 1861-1864, before going to larger scenes. He worked on the Territorial Enterprise as a reporter and writer, hired by Joseph T. Goodman, who seems to have given him every encouragement.

Goodman, several years younger than Twain and a vigorous pioneer editor, is among Emrich's octet. He is represented by two poems, "Virginia City" and "Comstock Prayer," both of which show more enthusiasm for the area than literary ability, and a prose piece of more interest, which gives a good-natured picture of the problems of a frontier newspaperman.

ANOTHER who worked on the Enterprise was Dan de Quille (William Wright), who joined the paper in 1862 and was associated with it until its suspension in 1893. Dan de Quille, as one of Virginia City's best known writers, is represented by half a dozen selections, among them a cliff-hanger with authentic suspense, "The Eagle's Nest."

Also included is his spoof, "The Silver Man." At the beginning of his career on the Enterprise—an especially long one considering the migrant habits of those days—Twain, too, was on the paper, and if there is any need for illustration of communal experience it can be found in Twain's "The Petrified Man" and Dan de Quille's "The Silver Man." To geology-minded men, the subject of petrification seems to have been especially fascinating.

The names of Dan de Quille and Twain are linked in Sam Davis' tall tale, "The Typographical Howitzer," a purported account of how Dan and Mark drove off a band of Indians by firing printing type at them.

In another yarn, told so straight that it is chillingly convincing until second thought, Davis describes the murder of one of two partners in speculation who had figured out a way to flood a mine at will by raising and lowering a plug in the bottom of Lake Tahoe.

Bret Harte was only a brief visitor to the Comstock country, but from that visit came the poem, "The Stage-Driver's Story," given here.

LESS FAMILIAR are three other writers in the anthology, J. Ross Browne, Fred Hart and James W. Galley. The last-named is so little known, in fact, that Emrich enters "a modest claim for 'discovery.'"

Emrich's anthology presents a composite picture of frontier life, brawling, sprawling, covering its crudities with broad humor, which carries across the years with undiminished vitality. It is a life that has largely disappeared, but is not yet remote. Four of Emrich's eight lived beyond 1900, one, Goodman, living until 1917, and another, Sam Davis, until 1918.

So well known is Mark Twain that his name dominates this anthology gaily bound in silver. But Emrich, chief of the Library of Congress' Folklore Section and author of "It's An Old Wild West Custom," has wisely placed him at the end. Read after the other inclusions, the Mark Twain writings are seen in their original environment, and that Twain was part and parcel of his milieu is obvious.

In Emrich's selections, the Virginia City of other days still lives to delight the Western fan.—LEE GROVE.

Bennett Even Invents Gags

More Driftwood From the Cerf

By Sterling North

LAUGHTER INCORPORATED. By Bennett Serf, Garden City. 191 pp. $1.50

THERE WAS the nurse who left her job because "The child was backward and the father was forward." And there was the housewife who complained to her maid that she could write her full name in the dust on the piano, to which the maid replied, "It's sure nice to be working for a lady with education." And then there was the scissors grinder who announced happily, "I'm having my best season. I never saw things so dull."

That last quip should go double for jokesmiths. If you find anyone laughing these days, it's because she's hysterical. You have to keep your stories short because they might be cut off any moment by an atomic bomb.

But don't think I'm looking a laughing gift horse in the mouth. I would like to see Cerf sweep the country. Stranger things happened in the recent election.

It isn't true that Bennett carries a small wire recorder in his vest pocket, or that his collections are merely a matter of scissors and taste. He frequently invents a gag of his own.

One thing about Bennett's jokes, you can tell them in mixed company. And if the company is mixed with dry martinis you are likely to get a laugh. Some of his stories improve with age, which is just as well.

Another thing, Cerfiana is seldom vicious. Despite the fact that he is a book publisher, Bennett is essentially a kindly man. His stiletto is tipped with a local anesthetic which seldom spreads to a general anesthesia. He wouldn't laugh at a man slipping on a banana peel unless the man was a celebrity.

Bennett appends a list of "don'ts" for story tellers which should be crocheted in letters of gold on every antimacassar. Don't make a story too long. Don't forget your point in the middle of a story. Don't laugh at your own jokes too much (people will say you're in love).

But Bennett does laugh at his own jokes and it is usually infectious. And I don't blame him for warning you about the time and the place for telling a story. It's always embarrassing to absent-mindedly tell your fresh gag to the guy who invented it.

Bennett isn't a name dropper, because name-droppers are people who don't know the celebrity whose name they are dropping. Bennett knows everybody. But I suspect that he does pin gags on names that make news. For instance, a pun is funnier and safer if you can share the crime with Fred Allen or Sam Goldwyn. A fairly innocuous joke would be hilarious if you said you heard it directly from Dowager Queen Mary.

Finally, I would like to shatter a lance for Bennett on the old indictment of "literary theft." Jokes are seldom literature in the first place. In the second, like folk ballads, they are definitely in the public domain. They belong to the last man who twisted them. Furthermore, columnists who claim he lifted his best gags from their columns, conveniently forget that they lifted them from somebody sitting around at 21 or the Stork Club, who in turn picked them up from somebody else, who probably originally picked them up from Cerf.

There are only a certain number of fundamental jokes in the first place, and it would be perfectly simple to invest a mechanical brain with 20 pushbuttons and a laugh-o-meter which could work all the possible changes on the time-honored gags, test them for popularity and package them like breakfast food. On second thought, Cerf probably has such a machine.

The alibis of fisherman and husbands, the wisecracks of talking horses and shaggy dogs, the absent-minded professor who eats the frog in his pocket and dissects his sandwich, the well-upholstered dowager bawling out a truck driver or shooting craps with the delivery boy—all, all have been with us ever since the first caveman tickled his wife's risibility with a club.

But Bennett, with a true collector's instinct, not only gathers the best of these rough gems, but cuts, polishes and mounts them for the retail trade.

To coin a phrase, one might say—He who laughs last laughs best. Particularly if he collects the book royalties.

A Candid Study of Hugo Black And His Judicial Philosophy

By Chalmers M. Roberts

HUGO BLACK, a Study in the Judicial Process. By Charlotte Williams. Johns Hopkins. $3.50.

ALTHOUGH it has been only 13 years this fall since Hugo L. Black took his seat on the Supreme Court, the age which he has represented is in a way drawing to a close.

The famous Black-Douglas-Murphy-Rutledge combination has been decimated by death and, in Miss Williams' words, "thus the influence of Justice Black's judicial philosophy upon the course of constitutional development may reasonably be expected to decline in the immediate future." In fact, it did just that in the 1949-50 term.

This is a careful, temperate and highly objective study of Franklin D. Roosevelt's first appointee to the Court in the wake of the "packing plan." For those who wish to know the now retiring former Senator who is the ranking justice in point of service, this study is heartily commended.

With Black's own opinions and Court votes bearing witness, Miss Williams takes the reader through the Black philosophy. The author makes it clear, and proves it, that Black employs useful Constitutional provisions "in his effort to help the poor and weak in their struggle against the more powerful." For if there is a guiding Black philosophy, that appears to be it.

Many observers of the Court would agree with this Williams appraisal:

"It is probable that Justice Black belongs to that school of thought which holds that every judge, consciously or unconsciously, writes into his opinions his own economic, social and political ideas and that the notion of judicial impartiality is little more than a myth. At any rate, he has gone to no pains to disguise the fact that he himself has positive ideas of rightness which he believes should be embodied in the law, and when he incorporates these in his opinions he feels little necessity for apology or rationalization. Perhaps he no more than others writes his feelings into law, but does so more candidly."

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

IN THE exhibition of Lincoln material opening today at the Library of Congress is a 7x10½-inch, 16-page pamphlet that was printed by the old Washington Chronicle four score and seven years ago.

The pamphlet is the first edition of Lincoln's Gettysburg address, and when the library wanted to exhibit a copy it had to borrow it from the library of the Scottish Rite Supreme Council, 16th and S sts. nw.

The only other copy of the pamphlet known is in the possession of the Illinois State Historical Library. But Assistant Librarian of Congress David C. Mearns, the Lincoln authority, has a hunch that because the pamphlet was printed in Washington there may be another in somebody's attic around here.

So, if you have a pamphlet that contains Lincoln's and Edward Everett's speeches at Gettysburg, a description of the battlefied and program 87 years ago, and it matches the picture here, treat it with care and respect.

"NOBEL Prize-Wining Novelist William Faulkner, or Falkner, doesn't care how you spell his last name," according to a United Press story from Oxford, Miss.

"The name originally was Falkner. But when he published his first book, the proofs of the title page came out 'Faulkner.' He didn't have the money to get the plates corrected. So the author was listed as Faulkner for his first and all future books.

"'Who's Who,' lists him as 'William Falkner (originally Faulkner).' Either way, it suits the author."

"Run, Mongoose," the adventure novel by Washington's Burke Wilkinson, has gone into a second printing, Little, Brown has just announced.

E. E. CUMMINGS, the poet, will address the Institute of Contemporary Arts at 8:40 p. m. Tuesday, reading from his works. The reading will be held at Pierce Hall.

FROM the Publishers' Weekly obituary for George Bernard Shaw: He refused to let his work appear in anthologies and he was very much against textbook editions of his plays.

"I will have nothing to do," he wrote Dodd, Mead, "with schools and colleges at any price. No book of mine shall ever, with my consent, be that damnable thing a school book. Let them buy the dollar editions if they want them. By a school edition they mean an edition with notes and prefaces full of material for such questions as 'Give the age of Bernard Shaw's great-aunt when he wrote "You Never Can Tell" and state the reason for believing that the inscription on her tombstone at Ballyhooly is incorrect.'

"The experienced student reads the notes and prefaces and not the plays, and forever after loathes my very name."

One Has Spanned Four Decades

Open Sesames to an Exciting World

By Sterling North

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE: Fortieth Anniversary Edition. Edited by E. V. McLaughlin. The Grolier Society Inc. 20 Volumes. 7580 pages. $119.50.

ONE CONTRIBUTION to our culture, which has spanned four decades and outlasted both the tradition of reading aloud and "The Youth's Companion" and "St. Nicholas" magazine, is "The Book of Knowledge," still available for parents who are interested in raising offspring not likely to become "comic book illiterates."

I spent fascinated hours with "The Book of Knowledge" in my own childhood. Our children, now in college, probably turned more frequently to their more modern edition of this set than to any other 20 books in our 10,000-book library.

If it becomes necessary to start civilization from scratch in a few caves protected from the hydrogen bomb, I hope that, along with Shakespeare's plays, the Bible, the unabridged Webster's Dictionary and the Encyclopaedia Britannica, there will be a few sets of "The Book of Knowledge." It might make all the difference with the younger generation of cave dwellers.

I have made a pilgrimage to the New York offices of the Grolier Society and had a look at the latest edition. I found that I was not alone in my approval of this highly readable condensation of world culture.

Other American citizens had already expressed their admiration, and their letters were in the files. Here were tributes from Admiral Byrd, Louis Bromfield, Bing Crosby, Lee de Forest, Angelo Patri, Eleanor Roosevelt, David Sarnoff, Leland Stowe, Robert R. Young and dozens of others who seem to feel as I do that "The Book of Knowledge" is a must in shaping the next generation for citizenship.

When I first tried to use this set, I was a trifle confused because the information I wanted was often distributed through five or ten different volumes.

WHAT I REALIZE now is that what seemed to be an exciting sort of chaos—a chaos which lured me into reading whole volumes as I would novels by Mark Twain or Dickens—is in reality a shrewd come-on for the younger reader, and that the intelligent use of the general index makes this 20-volume "magazine" into a reference set.

Children are seldom willing to sit down to read a reference book from cover to cover. Who wants to progress from Aard-Vark to Aard-Wolf to Aaron's Rod? Or from Zoroaster to Zouave to Zululand?

Any reader young or old wants variety, change of pace, surprise. I remember particularly from my early experience that one might be reading about explorations in Darkest Africa one moment and the next come upon airplanes, "The Diamond Necklace" by Guy de Maupassant, or "What Is Electricity?" It had a Christmas stocking sort of suspense.

LUCKILY, this celestrial grab-bag arrangement is still apparent in the Fortieth Anniversary Edition where Sports in Canada, complete with Salmon Fishing, may be followed by a few fairy tales by the Brothers Grimm, an essay on ferns and a piece on popular metallurgy.

For four decades a large staff has been constantly revising this set, but the greatest revision has occurred since the end of World War II.

The set contains some 15,000 illustrations of which 2200 are in color; the index entries total 31,000; and in addition to some thousands of pages of new text, more than two million word changes have been made in the last few years to bring various articles to date.

What impressed me more than all the revisions was the fact that here was my "Book of Knowledge," changed and improved of course, but still as I remembered it: an open sesame to a wide, wonderful and exciting world.

MY BOOK HOUSE; New (Revised) Edition, published by The Book House for Children, Chicago. 12 Volumes, 2752 pages. $69.50.

IN ITS CURRENT revision, this childhood literary treasure chest is a beautiful thing to see. The new bindings, intended to teach the child color tones and help him identify individual volumes even before he learns to read, range from a delicate apple green to a brilliant "hunter" green, from a dazzling royal blue to a dainty powder blue. Cover lettering is of 24-carat leaf-gold.

Much new material, about 200 pages of it, has been added. There are 100 new illustrations, most of them in color. Among notable poems and stories included for the first time are "The Ducks' Ditty," by Kenneth Grahame; "King Hilary and the Beggarman," by A. A. Milne; "What the Children Do in Summer," by Pearl S. Buck and "The Boy Samuel," retold from the Bible.

"My Book House" was first published in 1920 in six volumes, as a character-building plan of right reading for children from babyhood through early adolescence. In 1932 it appeared in 12 volumes. It was next revised in 1937. The current revision contains the best work of 180 authors from the basic literature of 50 countries.

The material has been "graded emotionally" to fit the youngster's ever-broadening interest during the five phases of his development, and "graded physically" on the basis of vocabulary, subject matter, length and complexity of structure and plot. The premise is that a child, given reading matter lower than his mental age, loses interest in the printed page; given reading matter beyond his comprehension, he regards reading as a disagreeable chore. Both these eventualities appear to have been happily escaped here.

With the set comes a guidebook to give parents an understanding of the important phases in the child's development and guide him in the most effective use of graded stories and handwork.

Illinois Upsets Ohio State, 14 to 7

Walker's Secret Pass Play Turns Back Buckeyes

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP).—Illinois, the great running team, sprung an aerial touchdown off trick plays in the second period to surprise mighty Ohio State, 14-7, today and shoot ahead in the Big Ten Rose Bowl race.

It was the first Big Ten loss for Ohio State, ranked last week as the Nation's top team in the AP poll.

Muffed on the ground as never before this season, the Illini pecked at the Buckeyes' weakest spot, pass defensive, and clicked superbly before a capacity throng of 71,119 wild fans.

52 Yards for a Touchdown

The win, the Illini's fourth in five league games, shoved them ahead of Wisconsin in their torrid duel for the Bowl bid. Each has one more game to play.

Little Fred Major, wearing a chin mask to protect a broken jaw bone, faked a jump pass in the first two minutes of the second quarter and finally fired the ball to Don Stevens. The former Youngstown, Ohio, prep star snared it on the Ohio State 28 and, as defender Fred Bruney lunged at his heels, skipped loose to flee for a touchdown. The play was good for 52 yards and the tally was Stevens' first in two years at Illinois.

Six minutes later the Illini thrust again through the air to what became the clinching marker. The drive was touched off by Illini Joe Hall's recovery of Chuck Candee's bobble on the Illinois 47. With Johnny Karras streaking 12 yards, the Illini covered the distance goalward in seven plays with Major finally pitching the last five yards to Stevens in the end zone.

The payoff pass came on a spread formation, a play nursed in secrecy all season to be used today.

Just before the touchdown, Major's toss to End Tony Klimek on the same spread alignment was fumbled by the great end, but Stevens snapped it up in midair to make it count and set up the touchdown on the next down. Sam Rebecca converted both times.

With 3½ minutes left in the explosive second period, Ohio State became the first team of the season to score on the ground against Illinois' steeled defense.

Ohio State's Vic Janowicz, every bit an All-American today, and Tony Curcillo, the injured Buckeye quarterback who played brilliantly, used End Tom Watson as their passing target on three plays that gained 59 yards.

Janowicz eventually slammed over from the 4 to end an 83-yard surge in 10 plays. He also converted.

In the finale, Walt Klevay's 22-yard run ignited a 70-yard Buckeye blast that ended on the Illinois ten when Eli Popa, a defensive fullback from Canton, Ohio, recovered his second fumble as Sophomore Klevay bobbled. Later Chuck Gandee led a spurt to the Illini 28 before Ohio State was stalled.

The Buckeyes, who had averaged 41 points per league game before being tamed today, almost gave Illinois another touchdown at the outset of the first period. Popa pounced on Fred Bruney's fumble on the Buckeyes' 20 and from there Illinois moved to the 1 before Dick Raklovits lost 5 yards to cancel the threat.

Ineligible for the Rose Bowl, Ohio State can cinch the Big Ten crown by beating Michigan next week and also eliminate any hopes the Wolverines may have of going to Pasadena. Michigan defeated Northwestern today for its third win against one loss, to Illinois, and a tie, to Minnesota.

Illinois could cinch the bowl bid with victory over Northwestern next week, which would give Coach Ray Eliot's outfit a 5-1 league mark. Wisconsin, with the advantage of a seven-game schedule, winds up against Minnesota. A triumph would give the Badgers a 5-2 record.

Illinois' only loss in eight games for the entire season was 7-6 to Wisconsin in a downpour.

Blaik's Son Bob Pulls Army Out With Pass

PALO ALTO, Calif., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Out of the gloom of a rainy afternoon, brilliant Bobby Blaik struck like lightning today in one sudden third-period thrust that gave his proud dad's Army Cadets a thrilling 7-to-0 victory over keyed-up Stanford before 60,000 soaked spectators.

While the fans huddled in raincoats through one of the season's worst storms, Blaik first put Stanford in the hole by kicking out of bounds on the Indians' 4. Then, when the day seemed darkest for the Cadets, he rifled a touchdown pass 32 yards through the downpour into the waiting arms of Dan Foldberg.

Al Pollard converted and that completed the scoring for the day.

Outside of a muffed chance in the first minute of play when Army recovered a fumble on Stanford's 11, that was the only serious scoring threat. Atcually, when it came it was third down and 22 to go for a first down for the Cadets and the threat had not appeared serious.

Up until that third quarter, Stanford had outplayed the Cadets, getting a standout performance from a fast-charging line. The Indians bottled up every other Army threat.

The win was the twenty-eighth in a row for the Cadets, extending back to the 1947 season and it was a tough blow for a Stanford team that fought its heart out and actually outplayed a rival that was a three-touchdown favorite.

Three times Stanford drove down to the Army 30-yard line, but each time the attack stalled and Coach Marchie Schwartz sent in his giant end Bill McColl to try a field goal. But the waterlogged ball, aimed straight at the center of the goal posts, was a bit short each time.

Both clubs played a waiting game seeking a break on a fumble. The breaks never came.

The result was a kicking duel between Blaik and Stanford's Dick Horn that was just about even—although Blaik got the decision when that 35-yard punt that went out of bounds on the 4 set up the touchdown a few minutes later.

That kick forced Horn to kick from behind his own goal line and his boot went to the 39 to set the stage for the winning play.

Blaik, son of Army Coach Earl (Red) Blaik, directed the Cadets alertly all the way, but no one had reckoned with the fighting spirit of the losers. Playing against one of the Nation's top-ranked teams, they battled them almost even in the statistics. Army chalked up eight first downs to seven for Stanford, while the Cadets gained only 137 yards rushing to 125 for the losers.

CAN'T CATCH KAZMAIER—Dick Kazmaier (42), Princeton's versatile back, had a busy day yesterday in Princeton's 47-12 drubbing of Yale at New Haven. Kazmaier had a hand in six of Princeton's seven touchdowns. Above, Kazmaier races through a big opening in Yale's defense for a score. Note the excellent block thrown at the right by an unidentified Princeton man, dumping Yale's Earl Rusnak (43) to a sitting position. Princeton, undefeated, needs only a victory over Dartmouth in its final game Nov. 25 for a perfect season

Charney Star As Hoyas Top Holy Cross

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 18.—New England remains charmed territory for Georgetown.

Two-touchdown underdogs, the Hoyas put on a tremendous offensive display in the first half and hung on determinedly for a 21-14 victory over Holy Cross before 12,000 today at Fitton Field.

Georgetown made all its points before intermission and walked off with a 21-7 lead. It stood up, thanks to Capt. Tommy Hardiman.

Holy Cross was driving for the tying touchdown, and Charlie Maloy, great soph passer, pitched it to a first down on the Georgetown 3 in the middle of the fourth quarter.

Paul Gallo fumbled going into the line and safetyman Hardiman made a beautiful diving recovery. Later, when the ever-dangerous Maloy tried a long pass, Hardiman was there to make his second intereception and clinched Georgetown's second victory of the season.

The other was scored ever so long ago over Boston College. In four trips to New England in two seasons, Georgetown has turned in four wins.

Although Georgetown saved its victory by recovering the fumble, it had a tough break itself later. Frank Mattingly, who threw only one pass in the second half, found Halfback Ralph Charney for a perfect 67-yard touchdown play. That is, it would have been perfect but Georgetown was called offsides and the apparent score was nullified.

Charney, a sophomore, didn't score a point but put on a brilliant show in that first half, setting up all three of the Hoya scores.

Somebody had to come through because Bugs Thompson was hurt and went out early. So did Dick Doyle. Doyle was carried off on a stretcher and taken to the hospital where his back was X-rayed.

Georgetown marched 81 yards for its first touchdown and Charney contributed gains of 19, 11 and 8 yards. After Ralph burst through tot the 2, fullback Gino Pagluica went over in two tries.

Holy Cross retaliated in two minutes of the second period after Maloy completed passes of 20 and 18 yards. The second was

Two Injured Hoyas

Two Georgetown players remained in St. Vincent's Hospital, Worcester, Mass., last night. Halfback Dick Doyle received a bruised spine. At first, a break was feared, but X-rays were negative. Guard Jack Schuster, who received a head injury, was held for observation.

Sooners Take 29th Straight

NORMAN, Okla., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Oklahoma, scoring four touchdowns in the first half, breezed past Missouri like a streamliner through a whistle stop today for at 41-7 victory and its 29th straight triumph.

The runaway win gave the Sooners at least a tie for the Big Seven championship which they have held alone the last two seasons. The Nebraska Cornhuskers have a chance to share the title—but first they must beat Oklahoma next week.

The only disappointment for this Dad's Day crowd of 47,000 was the failure of Sooner Quarterback Claude Arnold to equal the record of 88 passes without an interception, held by Pennsylvania's Francis Bagnell. Arnold's second pass of the game—the 86th in his string—was snagged in the end zone by Missouri Halfback Harold Carter.

Oklahoma's Leon (Mule Train) Heath set the pace in the opening period when he shattered the Missouri forces on two straight plays totaling 45 yards, putting the ball on the Missouri 5. A moment

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Nov. 18—Maryland dominated today's football renewal with West Virginia from the flip of the opening toss, which it won, to the game ending gun, slamming down the Mountaineers, 47-0.

It was Maryland's most impressive victory since that great day in October when the Terps plastered Michigan State.

Ralfback Bob (The Brat) Shemonski, who was only one point behind Clemson's Fred Cone for the Southern Conference scoring leadership going into today's game, scored three touchdowns to run his total to 66 points.

The Terps, racking up their sixth success against two defeats and a tie, scored in every period

Tigers Top Yale, 47-12, To Win Big 3 Title

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 18—A Princeton team that in the first half threatened to score one point for each of the 73 years it has battled Yale finally contented itself today by inflicting a 47-12 defeat on the Elis.

Before 52,000 spectators in the deep-dish Yale Bowl, the sons of Old Nassau generated the power from its single wing to give Yale the worst beating of the ancient Ivy-hung series and clinch the championship of the Big Three.

Princeton, with its Dick Kazmaier running wild, blasted Yale out of the ball game by running up a 33-12 lead in the first half and at the finish had bosted its No. 7 position in the national ranking. The unbeaten Tigers today were winning their twelfth straight.

Kentucky Wins, 83-0

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 18 (AP).—Vito Parilli unlimbered his brilliant right arm to toss five quick touchdown passes for a new national collegiate record—23—and start Kentucky to a relaxing 83-0 rout of weak North Dakota today in an intersectional football game before 20,000 fans.

The rifle-armed Kentucky quarterback found end Al Bruno waiting for four of his scoring heaves and the end Dominic Fucci awaiting the other. He retired for keeps early in the second quarter after completing 15 passes in 20 attempts for 198 yards.

Kentucky, though playing outside the Southeastern conference, clinched its first league championship as Alabama blasted the last contender, Georgia Tech, 54-19.

Navy Defeats Lions, 29-7

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—On this rare, raw Saturday afternoon, the maligned Midshipmen of Annapolis found a football team they could beat.

They ground out a 16-7 lead on Lou Little's Columbia Lions and finished with a mighty flourish of two touchdowns in the last seven seconds. It added up to a 29-7 triumph for Navy, its second victory of the season.

A crowd of 30,000 braved freezing temperatures and a cruel cross-field wind to see the teams battle at wood-planked Baker's Field.

VMI Shades Citadel, 13-7

LEXINGTON, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—Virginia Military Institute fought off a fourth-period scoring threat by The Citadel today to take a 13-7 Southern Conference football decision.

VMI romped to its first score after only one minute and 50 seconds in the first quarter. Tommy Birge skirted right end for 34 yards and the touchdown, working his way past several tacklers enroute to the end zone.

Exactly eight minutes later, Johnny Manajeck rounded end from 5 yards out to tally for The Citadel. Don Davis booted the extra point which tied the contest at 7-7. Manajeck's scoring thrust was set up by a 46-yard pass from Buddy Friedlin to End Jerry Deluga.

VMI Quarterback Jimmy Coley threw out in the flat to flanker Freddie Anson, who in turn handed off to Fullback Joe Stump, who galloped 13 yards to score. Birge missed the extra point but the game was won.

Red Scores Twice, Leads Three Drives

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18 (AP).—Francis (Reds) Bagnell, Penn's brilliant halfback, gave a magnificent performance today in leading the rugged Quakers to a crushing 20-0 victory over the Wisconsin Badgers from the Big Ten Conference.

An elusive runner and a sharp-shooting passer, the redhead from the sidewalks of Philadelphia sparked the winners on three long scoring marches of 68, 62 and 49 yards and smashed across himself for two touchdowns.

Playing in his next to last college game, Bagnell ran through and around the harried Badgers for 164 yards on 28 rushes and hit his receivers on 8 of 14 passes for another 65 yards. This brought his season's total to 1587 yards running and passing. In one stretch today he completed six straight throws.

Bagnell Wonderful

Through all this, the Wisconsin team was able to offer only feeble resistance against Penn's slashing single-wing attack.

Penn hammered 62 yards on nine plays to score after taking the opening kickoff, with Fullback Alan Corbo driving right through Wisconsin's center from the 2 for the touchdown.

Bagnell carried four times in that march, which set a pattern for the entire game. In the next Quaker surge of 68 yards he smacked the Badger defenses for repeated gains, including one dash of 17 yards after taking a lateral from Corbo. He finally lunged off left tackle from the 3 to culminate the drive.

The final Penn score in the opening minutes of the final period saw the magnificent sorrel-top turn Wisconsin's right end for 14 yards to cross the line. He carried six times in the course of the 49-yard push. He was, in short, almost the whole show.

The only time it looked as though the invaders might get back into the ball game came late in the first quarter when they were trailing by 11 points. Johnny Coatta connected on a pair of long throws to ends Gene Felker and Tilden Meyers which carried the Badgers from their own 48 down to the Penn 16 as the period ended.

The second period opened, Coatta swept around end and was run out of bounds on the Penn 5. But the ball was brought back and the Badgers penalized for back in motion, and that took all the starch out of the team.

Penn State Nips Rutgers

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Nov. 18 (AP).—Two spectacular touchdowns in the second half gave Penn State a thrilling 18 to 14 victory over Rutgers today.

An acrobatic 28-yard run by Tony Orsini with only six minutes to play gave the Lions their fourth victory of the season after a 78-yard scoring march in the third quarter cut down Rutgers 14-6 first-half edge.

Two Vince O'Bara passes to John Smidansky for 12 and 18 yards, forward to Ted Shattuck and one to Yukica set the stage for the Lions' third-period touchdown. Bob Pollard smashed over from the 2.

Rutgers went 79 yards in nine plays for a touchdown in the first quarter. Monahan faced 11 yards for the score. Penn State came back in the second quarter with O'Bara throwing 24 yards to Captain Owen Dougherty for the score. Rutgers took a 14-6 advantage before the half ended as Monahan hit D'Amato for 17 yards and the score.

Harvard Tops Brown, Ends Loss Streak

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 18 (AP).—Harvard's string of nine consecutive football setbacks, including six this season, came to an end today when little Carroll Lowenstein tossed two touchdown passes to give the Crimson a 14-13 triumph over Brown, another Ivy League doormat, before a paltry 11,000 crowd at the stadium.

Lowenstein first brought the Crimson from behind by completing a 65-yard scoring aerial to winger Fred Ravreby late in the first period and, on the second play of the finale, completed a 2-yarder to Gil O'Neil in the Brown end zone.

Dike Hyde's second successful conversion clinched matters for Harvard after right guard Bill Rosenau had dashed the Bruins hopes during the tenth minute of the third period by blocking Walt Pastuszak's placement try for a 14th Brown point.

Brown Scores First

Brown had taken the opening kickoff and, after putting together five first downs in a row, notched the first of the game's counters when Gennaro Zeoli climaxed an 80-yard drive by banging over from the one.

With less than two minutes left in the opener, Harvard started driving from its 14 and when it reached its 35, Lowenstein put his forces back into the game with his touchdown heave to Ravreby.

Pastuszak failed with a 35-yard placement field goal try while trying to break the 7-7 tie during the second period but the Bruins, winners, only over little Rhode Island State in their previous seven games, regained the lead in the third quarter.

Dick Brown started the Bruins rolling for their second touchdown by returning a punt 20 yards to Harvard's 45. Then Bob Lenker and Leon Breaulieu ripped the Harvard wall to shreds before the latter went over from the one.

Then Rosenau came through with his game-saving block, a spectacular feat that so inspired his Harvard teammates that they moved with the resulting kickoff from their 18 to Brown's 4 before the third session ended.

Lowenstein contributed three timely gains and clicked with two passes before Paul Crowley reeled off a 25-yard gain that put the Crimson who has seen but little game-service in the Harvard backfield, made 2 yards as the fourth period opened and then Lowenstein contacted O'Neil with his second touchdown heave.

It was Trinity's fifteenth victory in a series dating back to 1888. Wesleyan has won 33.

As Good as '47 Champs

Solomon Calls Tech One of Best Teams

ED SOLOMON, an authority on the subject, says proudly that his 1950 McKinley Tech football team is as fine as any that has played in an Interhigh Championship Game since it became a big league affair at Griffith Stadium.

Solly has had a Tech team in all three previous games at the ball park, sponsored by The Washington Post, and he's grooming his fourth for Friday night's encounter against the winner of Tuesday's Eastern-Anacostia game.

"Until this year, I would have said that my 1947 champions were the best," declares Solly. "From that team, we sent tailback Bugs Thompson to Georgetown, End Glenn Smith to Clemson and Tackle Julius Poms to William and Mary, and they're all regulars.

"But this team is every bit as good as that '47 bunch.

"It has the same determination, and hustle and drive. The boys are of the same high caliber.

"IT WON'T be long before you'll be hearing of the collegiate exploits of fellows like Benny Colandreo and John Wege and Stan Kernan and Conway Perkins and some of the others of this present club," says Solly.

Colandreo is a 155-pound senior who alternates at tailback with Kernan, a 160-pound junior. Solly is in the constant predicament of trying to decide which to put into the game—they're both so outstanding.

Colandreo is the team's leading scorer with nine touchdowns, and Kernan has eight. Solly would use them both in the same backfield if it weren't for Wege, 185-pound senior fullback. Wege has scored "only" seven touchdowns, but he has passed for six more.

Solly says it's not unfair to compare Colandreo and Kernan with Georgetown's Thompson. "Benny and Stan are as fast as Thompson, have as good a change of pace, and plenty of drive. Of course, they need the polish that comes with more experience."

WEGE IS THE line buster, who runs the tackles and guards, and then crosses up the opposition with a 40 or 50-yard touchdown pass. Four of his touchdown tosses carried more than 40 yards.

Perkins is Solly's model 180-pound tackle. He throws key blocks, covers up the errors of his teammates with quick thinking, and then goes to class and makes straight A's. He's a member of the exclusive National Honor Society.

Perkins isn't the only solid citizen on Tech's team. At one end, there's 6-foot, 2-inch Richie Gaskell, also a star of the basketball team, and president of the Student Council. And there's Center Glenn Frain, president of the Circle T Athletic Club, and tenor in the school choir.

All of which seems to point out that Tech and Solomon are not only building winning football teams, but character as well.

Colgate Beats Syracuse, 19-14

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 12 (AP).—Alan Egler, fast and shifty Colgate football captain, drove his team to a hard-earned 19-to-14 victory over Syracuse today before nearly 40,000 fans.

Egler scored two of his team's three touchdowns and accounted for more than half of Colgate's gains. He carried the ball 26 times and gained a total of 168 yards.

Syracuse, behind 19 to 7, made a frantic effort to overcome the Red Raider lead and fell only 15 yards short of doing so. In nine plays Bernie Custis, determined Syracuse quarterback, passed and ran the ball 60 yards for a score with only 1 minute and 43 seconds left to play.

Syracuse got the ball again on an onside kickoff on the Colgate 45-yard marker and with one long pass and an 8-yard run Custis got the ball to Colgate's 15-yard stripe. His effort to win the game ended there with three incomplete passes as the final whistle sounded.

Embry Reports Negotiations

Arthur Godfrey, Leo De Orsey Talk About Buying Pro Colts

BALTIMORE, Nov. 18 (AP).—Radio-television star Arthur Godfrey and his lawyer have been considering purchase of controlling interest in the Baltimore Colts of the National Football League, a club director reported today.

The negotiations hit a snag because the lawyer, C. Leo De Orsey, former part owner of the Washington Redskins in the same league, developed a sore throat.

However, they still are hanging fire, said R. C. Embry, one of the 15 Colt directors. A decision will have to be made soon because Abe Watner, current president, is pressing to become sole owner.

"I approached Mr. De Orsey in Washington three or four weeks ago," Embry said, "after deciding that Mr. Godfrey would make an ideal man to back the franchise. I outlined a plan to him and he showed immediate interest. Then he consulted with Mr. Godfrey and reported that Arthur also liked the idea."

Embry said the plan includes Godfrey becoming president and the reissuance at reduced value of stock in the Colts now held by 200 persons.

De Orsey, who sold 25 percent of the Washington Redskin stock to Radio Announcer Harry Wismer last year, told Embry his doctor has ordered him to rest because of a throat ailment.

"Under the circumstances," De Orsey said, "a discussion of any new enterprise has been placed second to my health on the agenda" and "my interest in the professional football team" will have to await his return from the rest.

The Colt board of directors will meet Monday to decide what they're going to do about operations next year. Watner became president this year by buying $10,000 worth of stock and guaranteeing any losses.

He has asked the board either to give him sole ownership or take over the notes he has signed for running the Colts this year. 'I don't know what the board will decide," said Embry.

Browns Favored by 20 Points Over Injury-Riddled Redskins

CLEVELAND, Nov. 18—It's been 63 days since the Washington Redskins won a football game and since they're not playing the Baltimore Colts until next week, tomorrow is expected to be the 64th day of their drought.

The cellar-bound Redskins face the title-bound Cleveland Browns at 2 p. m. and the prospects of each team moving another step toward their respective directions are very bright indeed.

The Browns, who are leading the American Conference of the NFL by half a game, are prohibitive favorites to extend the Redskins' losing streak to eight straight.

Most odds makers tonight were willing to give the Redskins and 20 points but there were very few willing to risk a buck or so on the chances of a team which has not won a game since September 16.

Unlike the plight of Coach Herman Ball, whose injury list tops his teams number of defeats by two, Cleveland Coach Paul Brown boasts a healthy squad.

The Browns have won seven of their nine games, including a healthy decision over the defending champion Philadelphia Eagles. Their only two setbacks have been at the hands of the New York Giants, who are tied with the Eagles for second place behind the Browns, a half game back.

That the Browns have no sympathy for the Redsins was clearly indicated several days ago when they denied the Redskins permission to restore Tommy Mont to the player list to alleviate the Redskins' critical quarterbacking condition.

Harry Gilmer, still not completely recovered from a shoulder injury three weeks ago, will be at the controls for Washington as long as he can go and, when he is unable to play any longer, Rookie Nick Sebek will have to come in. Sammy Baugh, with misery in his back, isn't being counted on.

Neither is Fullback Pete Stout nor Tackle Lauri Niemi, both out for the season, perhaps, with leg injuries. Other ailing Redskins include Bill Dudley, Hall Haynes, Al Demao, Bob Hendren and John Badaczewski. Each, however, will play.

B. C. Loses 8th Straight, To Villanova

BOSTON, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Villanova Wildcats, led by plunging Pete D'Alonzo, handed Boston College its eighth straight football defeat of the season, 29-7, today at frigid Braves Field before a slim 6281 crowd.

The 210-pound fullback scored three of the Main Liners' four touchdowns and had little trouble breaking through the B. C. line. He carried 14 times for a 6.9-yard average.

Slim Dick McBride, the Eagles' quarterback, gave the visitors their first points when he was trapped behind his goal line for a safety as he attempted to pass with only three minutes of the first period gone.

Villanova took six more minutes before D'Alonzo smashed over for a touchdown. Bob Haner converted to make it 9 to 0.

In the second quarter, D'Alonzo swept into the end zone again at four minutes, but Haner missed this time.

B. C.'s lone score came in this period when John McCauley carried over from the one after three tries.

Just before the half ended, Neil O'Boyle flipped a 30-yard pass to Joe Rilo for another touchdown.

Villanova completed its scoring in the third quarter when D'Alonzo broke through the line and sprinted 40 yards to the end zone.

B. C. had the ball much of the final quarter with McBride and Bob Richards attempting to pass, but their efforts were futile.

Villanova made 304 yards rushing to 159 for B. C. The Eagles got more yards in passing, however, piling up 159 to the Wildcats 62.

Dartmouth Trounced by Cornell, 24-0

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—Coach Lefty James finally got his Cornell T-machine clicking today to smother Dartmouth's Johnny Clayton in an impressive 24-0 victory before 28,000 fans.

Snuffing out Dartmouth's faint hopes for an Ivy League title, Cornell rolled for 24 points in the first half. After that James devoted the afternoon to polishing up his reserves for next Saturday's vital game with Pennsylvania.

Billy Kirk, usually a defensive halfback in the two-platoon system, contributed a brilliant 80-yard touchdown run on a punt return, kicked an 18-yard field goal and three placements to grab the scoring honors.

But this was a team triumph with the Cornell line overpowering Dartmouth. It was the first time the Big Red held Dartmout scoreless since 1933 in this 34th renewal of a traditional series.

Rocco Calvo threw an 11-yard scoring pass to Vic Pujo early in the first period. Kirk broke away for 80 midway in the second. Five minutes later Jeff Fleischmann jarred through the middle from the one to climax a 60-yard drive featured by Bill Whelan's fine 34-yard sprint. Kirk's field goal came only 52 seconds before the half ended after two potential touchdowns were called back.

The Cornell defense safely contained Bill Roberts, Dartmouth's smashing fullback who scored both touchdowns against Columbia last week. Roberts was held to 58 yards.

Clayton, rushed all afternoon, often was thrown for a loss. His rushing yardage this chill clear afternoon was a minus 25 yards. He completed six of 13 passes for 72 yards and gave way to Bob McCraney, his understudy, in the last quarter.

Cornell piled up 163 yards rushing and 110 in th air as compared to Dartmouth's 98 on the ground and 91 in the air. The invaders threw 23 passes, completing only nine. Cornell's passing, divided among five men, hit with 10 of 17.

20-Point Rally Wins for Rams

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18 (AP).—A beaten team for three periods, Fordham struck for three touchdowns in the final quarter today as the East's leading passer, Dick Doheny, sparked the once-beaten Rams to their sixth win of the season, 26 to 21, over a surprisingly rugged Temple team.

Doheny was virtually the whole show for Coach Ed Danowski's aggregation as they roared in the final quarter to overcome a 21-6 deficit going into the final 15 minutes.

In the space of less than nine minutes, the Fordhamites had the Owls on the run and the game safely tucked away. Doheny split the Temple defense time and again with aerials, generally to his favorite receiver, Alan Pfeifer.

It was Fullback Larry Higgins who produced the winning touchdown at 11:23 of the fourth quarter. But it was the Doheny touch that sent Temple down to its third loss of the year.

shattered an assortment of league records in achieving the win by the widest margin a Kentucky team had scored since 1914.

Parilli's five touchdown passes eclipsed by one the old national mark of 22 set by Stan Heath of Nevada in 1948.

Parilli, bidding for All-America honors, ran his yardage on passes to 1477 to shatter the 1392 yards gained by Frank Sinkwich of Georgia in 11 games in 1942. Parilli has a game to go.

He also smashed the record for touchdowns, in the league, gaining his twenty-eighth to shatter a 1947 record by Charley Conerley of Mississippi. He also passed Conerley's old touchdown pass figure of 18. Parilli's five payoff passes tied his own record.

Tackle Bob Gain, a potential All-America, booted the first 10 placements to tie an individual and team mark for single game extra points in the league.

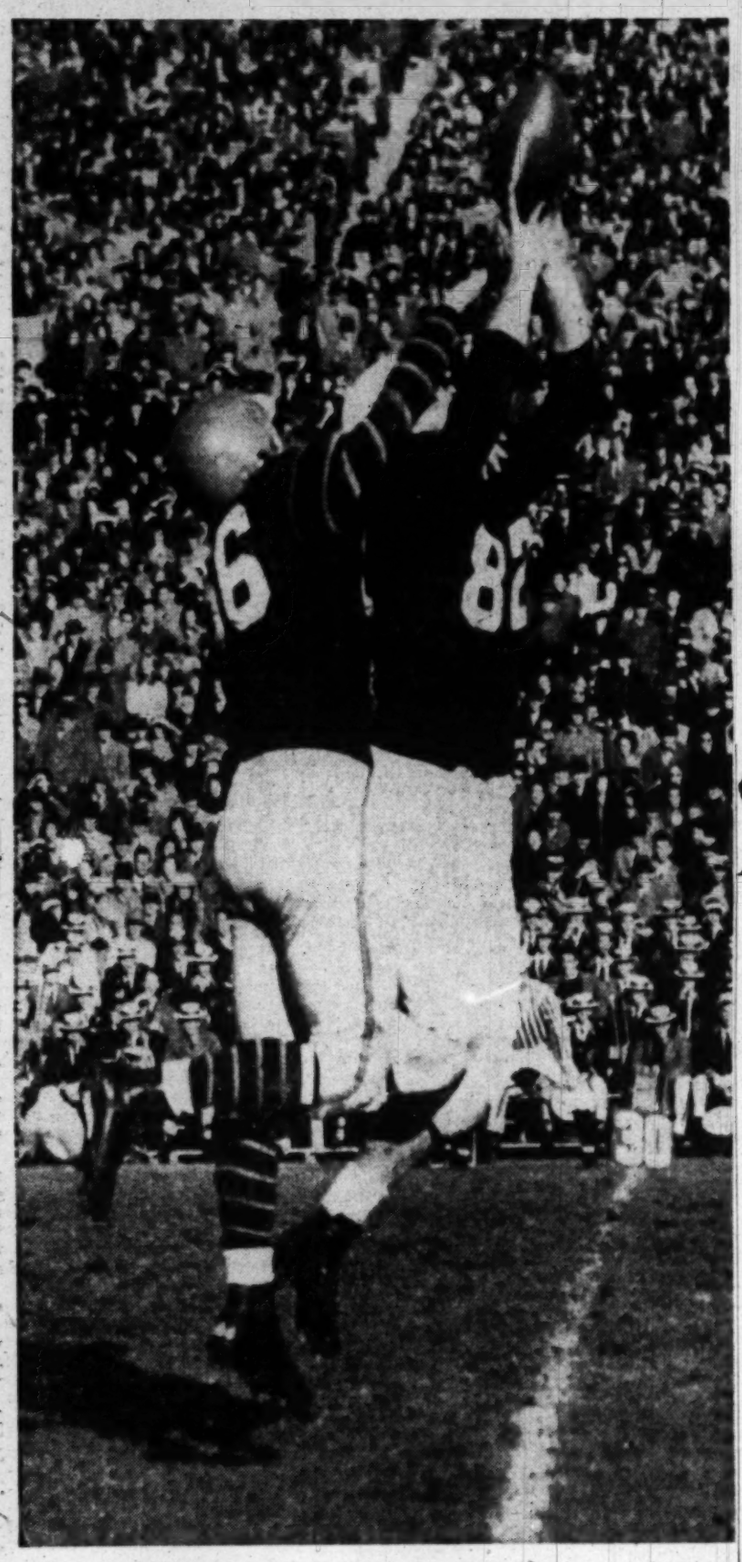
Princeton Emerges as No. 1 Among Big Three

Down the Line— Dick Kazmaier was a bundle of energy for Princeton's Tiger yesterday in the Yale Bowl. Here he shares honors with Ed Reed. Kazmaier let fly with a zipping pass to Reed in the second quarter and Reed stepped off the yardage nicely before Yale's Bill Wilson brought him down on the 2-yard line. Princeton won the Big Three championship with a 47-12 victory before 59,000 spectators



What, Again?— Yep, right as rain, it's Kazmaier once more tearing up the turf for Princeton's cause. This time Richard the Lion-Hearted knocked off 12 yards against hapless Yale. This happened in the second period. Princeton shoved Yale methodically back and back. Kazmaier came out the game the outstanding player of the day in Yale Bowl. Yale and Princeton started their series in 1873

Crew Cuts Are Everywhere As 59,000 See Tigers Beat Yale

By Red Smith
Reporter, New York Herald Tribune

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 18 (NYHT).—Even before the parkway from New York led into Connecticut, crew haircuts sprouted on all sides and near New Hhaven the autumn haze took on a bluish tinge, as of burning incense. Pilgrims jammed the highway and traffic moved jerkily, like hiccups, into this home of the hounds-tooth tweed, this land where the station wagons bear proud names.

The seventy-third battle between the football teams of Yale and Princeton drew a glorious November day, invigorating in a bitter, repulsive way, with a snaggle-toothed wind calculated to do more for television than berlie.

Nevertheless, pilgrims converged in massed formation upon the shrine called the Yale Bowl. They didn't quite fill this big goblet of stone but the Yales and Princetons were present to the number of 59,000 and even unto the third generation.

There were prattling babes in their swaddling clothes of mink, there were bristle-topped undergraduates haNess and uncoated; there were vintage items costumed for character roles—scads of extras in coon coats, one wearing a coonskin cap complete with tail, still another sporting one of those double-billed, fore-and after hawkshaw caps of tweed.

Press Box Not Exempt

Not even the press box was exempt. Up there, hunched over a typewriter, sat a weird creature wearing a hard straw hat with a wide band of orange and black and, about his neck, a monstrous tiger-striped scarf.

They had come to see Herman Hickman's 10-year plan inaugurated against the best Princeton ever had. They had imagined that the Yales aware of their sacred duty to abuse all Princeton men and further inspired by the vote of confidence while Yale had just given their coach by signing him for 10 more years, might arise and smite the mighty Princetons.

In any event, they were confident they would see some bloody combat, and in this they were not disappointed. The game was scarcely started when Yale's Harold Woodsum and Princeton's Dave Hickok clashed in pursuit of a forward pass and crashed together. Arising, Woodsum sort of accidentially ground Hickok's profile into the earth and Hickok jumped up and gave chase, his fists clenched. Nothing happened then, but things were promising.

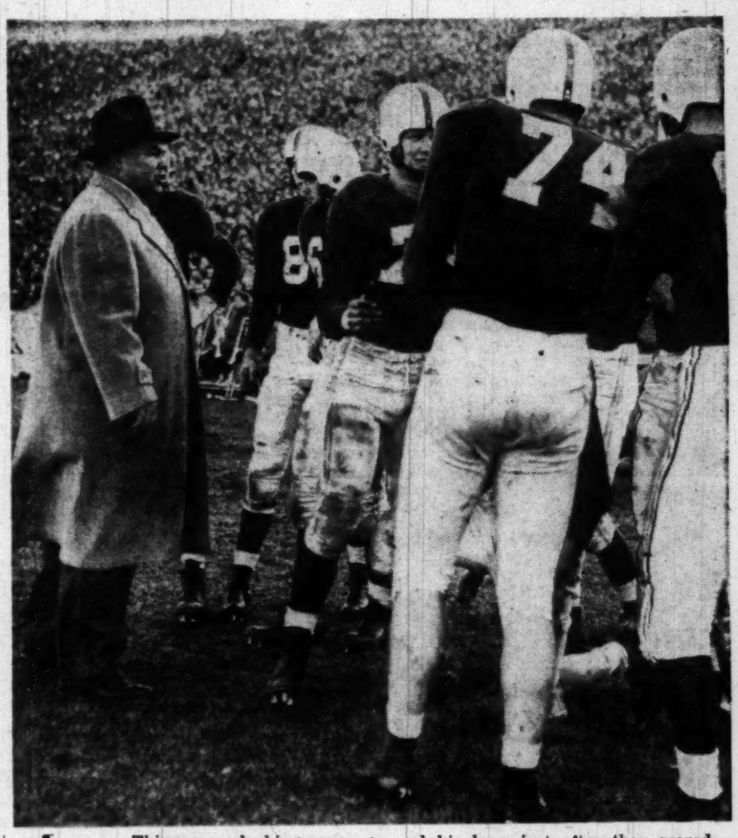
Yale Penalized

A few minutes later, Yale's John Downey was detected perched astride a Princeton operative and thumping him, and Yale drew a penalty for roughing. Thereafter, the officials got leg-weary pacing off roughing penalties mostly against Princeton. A case of single combat involving Brad Glass of Princeton, and Paul May, of Yale, promoted officials to excuse both from the exercises.

It was enormously diverting, but the weather was too cold for outdoor fights.

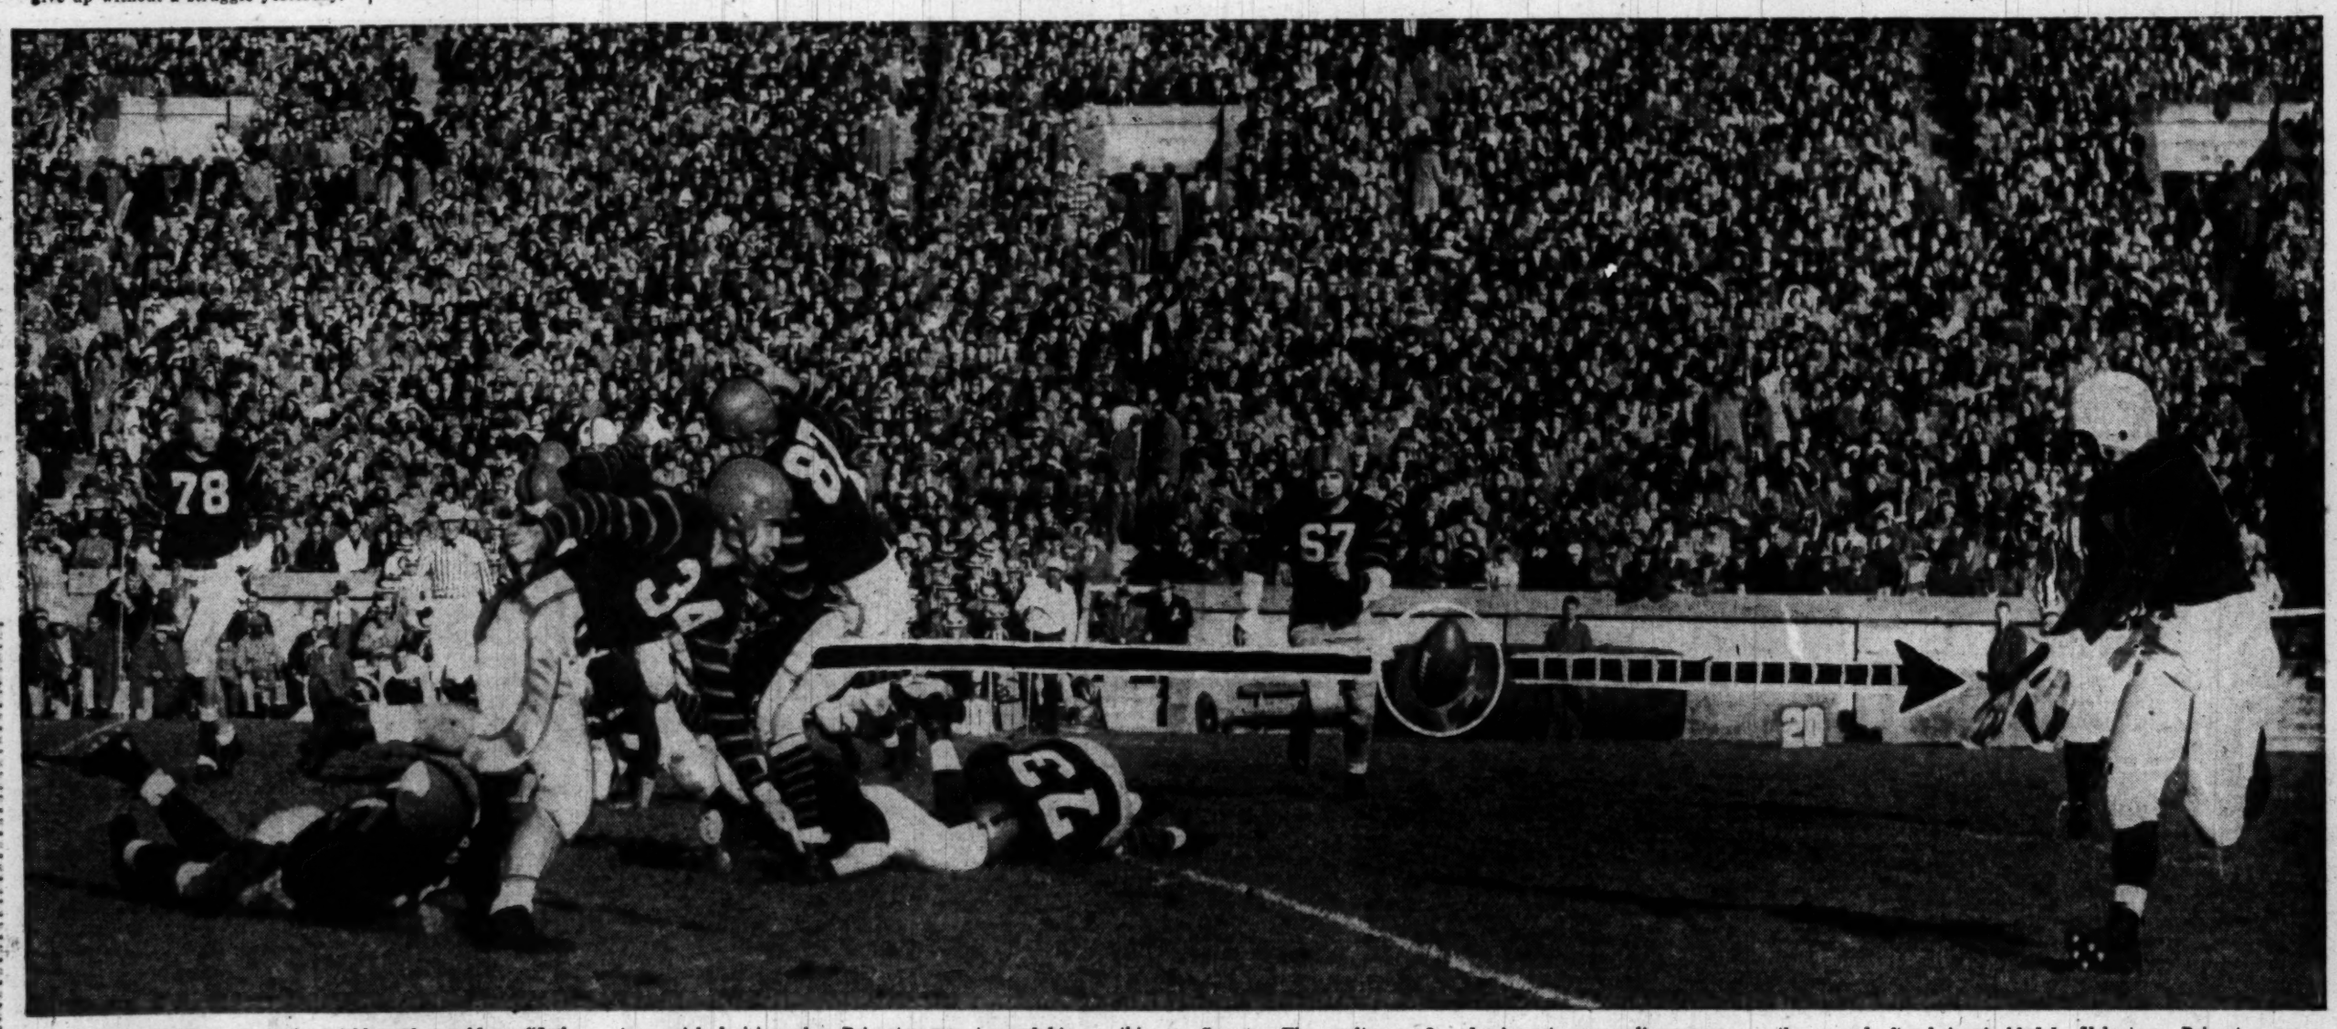
Hickman, a vast tubful of guile who has no compunctions about scrapping his whole offense to surprise the enemy, came up with a sleeper at the start receiving the opening kickoff, Yale immediately went into a short punt formation, which is so old it is entirely new, and Stu Tisdale started throwing passes out of this alignment.

All Pictures by Charles DelVecchio, The Washington Post



Joy— Things were looking none too bad for Yale as the photographer snapped Coach Hickman and his boys just after they scored their first touchdown. Last week Hickman signed a 10-year contract

Up and Up— Yale didn't give up without a struggle yesterday. Here Harold Woodsum bags a pass from Stuart Tisdale and gives Old Eli a first down.



Swift Work— As quickly as he could say "Jack Robinson," Yale's Stu Tisdale came to a quick decision when Princeton men trapped him on this play in the second quarter. He whipped a lateral pass to Jerry Conway. The result was a 2-yard gain, not a resounding accomplishment, but far better than a loss of ground. Tisdale is on the ground after being tackled by Valentzas. Princeton gave Yale its worst beating in Ivy League football history

Clemson's Hair Gets In Furman's

CLEMSON, S. C., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Dancing tailback Billy Hair and crushing fullback Fred Cone paced bowl-fevered Clemson to a 57-2 rout of Furman University in a Southern Conference game today.

Hair, who kept the 21,000 fans in a dither, danced 87 yards for a touchdown in the second period on a reverse, after he had tossed 16 and 63 yards to end Bob Hudson for a pair of touchdowns in the first period.

Cone burst through the middle for 62 yards to score at the start of the third quarter and ended the period with a five-yard scoring slam.

Furman threatened only once, but a fumble on Clemson's three halted the drive.

Duke Tramples Virginia Tech

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Right Halfback Herb Field, a Martinsville, Va., boy, flashed 92 yards with the opening kickoff today to set the pace for Duke's 47-6 slaughter of Virginia Tech.

Some 6000 slightly bored fans saw Tech take its eighth straight defeat of the season but score the second touchdown in its five-game history against Duke.

Blue Devil backs romped to touchdowns in every period—three in the first, one in the second and third, and two in the fourth. Tech marched 85 yards to its lone score early in the second period.

Blitzkrieg Billy Cox slammed for 6 yards and Duke's second score hard on the heels of Field's opening touchdown after Tackle Jim Lawrence recovered a kickoff fumble by Tech Halfback Sterling Wingo on the Virginians' 19.

The triumph gives Tennessee a season's record of eight wins against one setback to take against the unbeaten, untied mark of Kentucky.

Ernst Hurls 3 Times For Touchdowns

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 18 (AP).—Quarterback Joe Ernst mixed his deadly passes with deceptive ground plays to give Tulane a 42-18 homecoming football victory over bewildered Virginia today.

Ernst threw three scoring passes—8 yards to Halfback George Kinek, 4 yards to End W. C. McElhannon and 2 yards to Halfback Harold Waggoner.

He brought the 30,000 fans to their feet many times completing 14 out of 16 passes. Two were intercepted.

Tulane's other scores were added by Kinek on a 5-yard run, Waggoner on a 36-yard jaunt, and Ellsworth Kingery on a 3-yard buck. A safety and Tommy Comeaux's four conversions completed the Tulane scoring.

Virginia's first two touchdowns came on passes from Quarterback R. C. Barkley to End Edmund Bessell. The tosses were for 8 and 10 yards. The passing of Barkley and Charles Harding, as Virginia's most effective weapon against Tulane's bruising line.

The other Virginia score came late in the fourth quarter on a 5-yard run by Halfback Gerald Hurst.

N. C. State Ties Deacons

WAKE FOREST, N. C., Nov. 18 (AP).—A razzle-dazzle pass play covering 70 yards in the last two minutes enabled underdog N. C. State to tie once-beaten Wake Forest, 6-6, today before 18,000.

Blocking Back Ray Barkousie's attempted conversion, which would have won for the dogged Wolfpack, was wide of the uprights.

Wake Forest scored late in the first period after Tackle Jim Staton had raced in and partially blocked Ed Mooney's quick kick on the N. C. State 24. Four plays later Guido (Scooter) Scarton went over from the seven. Carroll Blackerby's pass to Scarton for the extra point was incomplete.

Backed up to their goal late in the final period, N. C. State launched a desperate drive which carried to its touchdown. Starting on their 10, the Wolfpack moved to the 30. From there Mooney passed to Fullback Jim O'Rourke who threw to Wingback Jim Smith. Smith took the ball on the Wake Forest 40 and went over standing.

Lehigh Ends First Unbeaten, Untied Season With First Win Over Lafayette Since 1936

EASTON, Pa., Nov. 18 (AP).—Lehigh University's rampaging Engineers rolled to their first unbeaten, untied football season in its 67-year football history by dumping Lafayette College, 38-0, before 20,000 today.

It was the first Lehigh victory over neighboring Lafayette since 1936 in the 86th renewal of one of the Nation's longest continuous rivalries, and apparently gave the Engineers an inside track on an invitation to the Sun Bowl next January 1 in El Paso, Tex.

Coach Bill Leckonby's Engineers combined 62-, 64-, 69-, 70- and 66-yard drives and a 51-yard run by right halfback Dick Doyne for their scores. Doyne failed, however, by 30 yards, of breaking the Eastern intercollegiate rushing record of 1,023 yards set last year by teammate Dick Gabriel.

Doyne's run for the final touchdown in the fourth period came on an explosion through his right tackle on the first play after a Lafayette punt.

Doyne's long run, however, was surpassed by a brilliant 64-yard punt return by Lehigh Quarterback Joe Moyer.

Moyer picked up the ball on his own 35-yard line and and reversed his field on a wide sweeping gallop as he sideswiped half of the Lafayette team. He finally was pulled down on the Lafayette one yard line. Quarterback Herbert Weiss crawled over for the score at the three-minute mark of the second quarter.

Kansas Coasts In Against State, 47 to 7

MANHATTAN, Kans., Nov. 18 (AP).—The Kansas' Jayhawks, led by a fleet corps of halfbacks, rolled up a big halftime lead, then let its defensive platoons carry the ball in a 47-7 victory over the lame Kansas State Wildcats today.

It was Kansas' third victory in the Big Seven conference against two losses, and it was the ending of another victoryless league season for Kansas State.

The Jayhawkers appeared to be looking ahead to their game with Missouri Thanksgiving Day instead of the work at hand during the first 12 minutes. Kansas State was out in front, 7-0, by virtue of a touchdown on an 80-yard drive and a conversion. Then came the deluge.

Georgetown Frosh Defeat W&M, 6-3

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Nov. 18 (AP). — Georgetown University's freshmen moved 60 yards for a fourth-quarter touchdown by Halfback Pete Gillespie today to beat the William and Mary frosh, 6-3.

It took the baby Hoyas only six plays to send Gillespie across from 2 yards out after they had recovered a fumble by the Indians' Danny Calabrese on their own 40-yard line. Quarterback Jim Stehlen's passing accounted for 36 of the yards and Gillespie added a 12-yard run.

Boot Hines booted a field goal from 20 yards out for the W. & M. frosh in the closing minutes of the first half.

Win Gives Title to Kentucky

Marlow Scores 4 Touchdowns As 'Bama Routs Ga. Tech

ATLANTA, Nov. 18 (AP).—Bobby Marlow, 195 pounds of speed and churning knees, scored four touchdowns, including a 91-yard sprint straight through the line, as Alabama crushed Georgia Tech today, 54-19.

Tech's defeat automatically assured the Southeastern Conference championship to Kentucky.

Alabama was favored to win by two touchdowns, but scored four in the first period alone and leisurely added four more with a total offense of 559 yards. Bobby North made Tech's first tally on a 39-yard run in the second quarter and Tech came charging back for two more in the last period.

But this was Marlow's day as the crowd of 38,000 can attest. The big sophomore scored his first touchdown on a 7-yard plunge, his second on a 25-yard pass from Ed Salem, his third on the brilliant 91-yard run which started with a quick opening play over right guard, and his fourth on a 24-yard pass play from Salem again.

Alabama, twice beaten, was all power and polish. "Suitcase" Ed Salem—so called because of his big feet—threw passes with deadly accuracy and Al Lary caught them on his fingertips. Tom Calvin ran with the ball almost as well as Marlow. Jug Jenkins, a defensive end, set up the first two touchdowns by blocking a punt and intercepting a pass close to Tech's goal.

Georgia Tech Pays Tribute to Barron

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 19—The 38,000 persons who attended the Alabama-Georgia Tech football game today paid a minute of silent tribute to the memory of Carter Barron, a star Tech halfback in the 1920s.

Barron, prominent Washington, D. C., theater man and civic leader, died last week at his home in the nation's capital.

Houston Whips W&M, 36-18

HOUSTON, Nov. 18 (AP).—Max Clark, a speedy halfback, and Frank Roddy, an alert pass defender, led the University of Houston to a 36 to 18 homecoming victory over William and Mary today.

Clark scored three touchdowns and added three conversions for 21 poins. Roddy paved the way for two second-half Houston touchdowns with pass interceptions deep in William and Mary territory.

William and Mary, moving behind the running and passing of Dickie Lewis, and the passing of Ed Magdzick, twice reduced its deficit to 12-16 and 18-23 but never took the lead.

N. Carolina Scores on 2 Long Drives

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 18 (AP). North Carolina struck back for two quick touchdowns here today for a 14-7 football conquest of South Carolina after the home team had taken a first period lead.

A crowd of 25,000 saw the Southern Conference game. It was the South Carolina homecoming.

Left Halfback Dick Bunting's 13-yard pass to Left End Benny Walser and Quarterback Bud Wallace's 2-yard plunge were the North Carolina payoff blows. The plays capped 62 and 63-yard drives.

South Carolina's touchdown came with dramatic suddenness after the opening kickoff. Fullback Blackie Kincaid broke through the middle of the line and raced 66 yards to the goal.

Fred Sherman converted after each North Carolina touchdown and Billy Killoy added the extra point for South Carolina. The scoreless second half was relatively unexciting. Neither team was able to gain consistently but North Carolina kept South Carolina more on the defensive with several booming quick kicks by Wallace.

South Carolina was handicapped, in addition, by injuries to both its star ballcarriers, Halfbacks Steve Wadiak and Bishop Strickland. Wadiak returned to the game in the closing minutes, however, after sitting out most of the last half. Strickland left the game in the third quarter.

Miami Topples Florida, 20-14; Georgia Barely Beats Auburn

Schneidenbach, Dooley Stand Out

GAINESVILLE, Fla., Nov. 18 (AP).—Bob Schneidenbach, powerful running fullback, turned into a passing quarterback and Jim Dooley, great defensive back, moved up to offense to click off three touchdowns and a 20-14 Miami victory over Florida today.

Filling in for the injured Jack Hackett and Frank Smith, Schneidenbach and Dooley played great ball to get the Miami Hurricanes their seventh victory of 1950. They tied Louisville last week.

Florida's courageous sophomores gave a sellout 40,000 crowd cause to cheer with their best defensive game of the season that now reads five wins and four defeats.

Florida never got its offense in gear until the closing minutes. Sophomore passing star Haywood Sullivan had Miami End Walt Chwalik on his neck every time he dropped back to toss.

And Miami tackle Al Carapella was kingpin in a solid smacking line that completely smothered the Gator running attack.

Miami tried time after time before finally cashing its first touchdown in the second period on a 30-yard pass from Schneidenbach to Tom Jelley. Early in the third, a Florida fumble on its own 29 set up Miami's second score. Dooley ran 22 yards for the six points.

Miami's final touchdown came after Florida Halfback Loren Broadus fumbled on the Miami 30 and the Hurricanes marched 70 yards. Schneidenbach powered across from the 1.

Victors Need Rally For 12-10 Decision

COLUMBUS, Ga., Nov. 18 (AP).—A heavily favored Georgia football team had to fight down an unexpectedly accurate passing attack by Bill Tucker today to come from behind and down Auburn, 12-10.

Without the service of Halfback Billy Mixon, the Georgia offense would have been all but powerless. He made the first Georgia score through the line after it was set up by Bill Davis' fumble deep in Auburn territory.

In the third quarter, when Georgia trailed by virtue of a Tucker field goal and touchdown, it was Mixon who was called on to spark two Georgia drives that were necessary for the winning score.

Mixon pushed the ball to the 1-yard line before a fumble stopped one drive. After a punt exchange, he provided the same spark to push the ball to the Auburn 18. Speedy Zippy Morocco cut in from the right side, reversed his field and scooted over for the winning touchdown.

Auburn had forged ahead early in the game after Georgia's first score. It was Bill Tucker's passing arm that spread the Georgia defenses and set up the Auburn score.

Tucker's short passes to Fred Duart, Lee Haley and Bobby Golden mixed with Golden's running sparked the Auburn touchdown drive that sent the Plainsmen into the lead in the first quarter. Tucker finally went over from the 1.

Auburn	7	3	0	0	10
Georgia	6	0	6	0	12

Auburn: Touchdown—Tucker. Conversion—Tucker. Field goal—Tucker.
Georgia: Touchdowns—Mixon, Morocco.

Gophers Trample Purdue, 27-14; Spartans Whip Pitt, 19-0

Minnesota Wins First For Bierman

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 18 (AP). Minnesota's Gophers, fired by the announced resignation of their coach, Bernie Bierman, put on their finest exhibition of football this year to come from behind and whip Purdue, 27-14, in a Western Conference game today.

The Gophers spotted Purdue's Boilermakers two touchdowns—one each in the first and second periods and then put together its first victory of the year.

And in so doing, they uncovered a new potential star in halfback Kerm Klefsaas, who scored the first three Minnesota touchdowns. In addition, he sparked most of the Gopher's drives downfield into scoring territory.

It was Klefsaas who, early in the fourth period, put the Gophers ahead with a driving run around his own right end to put the ball across despite the efforts of three Boilermakers on the goal line.

Then, to insure the victory, halfback Bob Thompson ran 70 yards on a punt return to cross the goal line.

Purdue's ace fullback, Johnny Kerestes, tallied both times for the Boilermakers, once in the first period and again in the second.

Kerestes' first tally came on a 36-yard run behind beautiful blocking. In the second period he took a pass from Quarterback Dale Samuels, after a fumble recovery put the ball on Purdue's 30. The pass and a snaking run through half the Minnesota team, was good for 70 yards.

A few plays later, Klefsaas ran 45 yards for his first touchdown.

In the second half, the Gophers clicked again. Klefsaas combined with Quarterback Ted Christensen and Halfback Darrel "Shorty" Cochran to move the ball to the nine-yard line.

Fullback Gary Johnson drove hard to within a half-yard of the Purdue goal, from where Klefsaas ran around right end to score.

The Gophers continued to dominate the play, but couldn't punch over another score until Klefsaas went around end early in the final period to put them ahead. Then came Thompson's 70-yard run for the victory climax.

Purdue	7	7	0	0	—14

Michigan Tops Northwestern By 34 to 23

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Nov. 18 (AP). — Michigan's pair of blond workhorses, Chuck Ortmann and Don Dufek, chipped holes in the Northwestern defenses here today in a 34-23 Big Ten victory that kept alive Michigan's Rose Bowl chances.

A crowd of 78,201 fans saw the two Wolverines rip through the Northwestern line for two touchdowns apiece in a conquest that found Michigan at its old-time strength.

Northwestern's Dick Flowers cut loose with a last-minute passing barrage that pulled the visitors within threatening distance—but the time ran out.

Michigan end Harry Allis converted all but the second touchdown kick and scored one touchdown himself.

For Michigan it was the third Big Ten win against a tie and a loss.

Northwestern's Flowers set up a new season pass completion mark of 56 to surpass the mark of 53 shared by Otto Graham of Northwestern and Perry Moss of Illinois.

Northwestern	0	9	0	14	—23

BEN MOORE ON LONG RUN IN QUANTICO MARINES' 48-0 VICTORY OVER TAMPA YESTERDAY IN ALEXANDRIA STADIUM

Grandelius Has Another Great Day

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 18 (AP).—Michigan State unveiled a sparkling and effective passing attack today to hammer out a 19-0 victory over Pittsburgh, which was stopped cold on the ground and bottled up in the air.

The visiting Spartans closed their 1950 season with the mighty Sonny Grandelius showing 26,679 fans his speed and prowess. Although Grandelius flashed the Spartans' running attack he left all the Michigan State scoring to his teammates.

The Spartans' Al Dorow outshone Pitt's quarterback and passing star, Bobby Bestwick.

The Spartans scored on the first play of the second quarter on a 24-yard forward pass from Dorow to Henry Minarek. Fullback Dick Panin also scored in the second on a 12-yard run through the Pitt line. In the third quarter, Dorow passed 28 yards to Carey in the end zone for the last touchdown.

Grandelius accounted for 74 yards to pass the 1000-yard mark for the year. That makes him one of the games' immortals. He has already passed the yardage mark set last year by Lynn Chandnois, former Spartan star now playing with the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Michigan State won eight out of nine for the season, losing only to Maryland, 34-7.

Michigan State	0	13	0	6	—19

Touchdowns—Minarik, Pannin, Carey. Conversion—Carey.

Indiana Thumps Marquette, 18 to 7

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Nov. 18 (AP).—Indiana had to score a couple of quick touchdowns in the final quarter today to beat a Marquette team it had pushed around most of the day, 18-7, before 30,000.

Marquette gained only 16 yards net in the first half while Indiana was taking a 6-0 lead on Bobby Robertson's six-yard scamper. Then Marquette's offense clicked with a 68-yard touchdown march on 11 plays with Ralph Esposito going the last 10 yards. Ronald Leahy converted.

Marquette's 7-6 lead lasted until Robertson scored his second touchdown of the game from the Marquette 29. Dick Olson scored from the two after carrying the ball on three of the four plays to get it there.

Marquette	0	0	7	0	— 7
Indiana	6	0	0	12	—18

Marquette scoring: Touchdown—Esposito. Point after touchdown—Leahy.

Iowa State Bows, 20-13, To Nebraska

LINCOLN, Nebr., Nov. 18 (AP).—Rambling Bob Reynolds turned pin-pointing punter today in Nebraska's 20-to-13 victory over Iowa State.

A crowd of 36,000 saw Reynolds, with his excellent punting, start Nebraska on the way to victory in the first quarter. He put Iowa State in the hole with a kick that bounced out on the 5. Nebraska promptly got another good break when Bill Weeks fumbled and Tony Winey recovered the ball for Nebraska on the 6.

It took Nick Adduci just two plunges to score and Reynolds kicked the point for a 7-to-0 halftime lead.

In the third period, Weeks whipped around the Nebraska left end for 19 yards to score for State and from the 4-yard line Adduci skipped around end to score for Nebraska.

Just to make it doubly sure, Reynolds skipped over from the 7 for Nebraska's third touchdown in the fourth period.

That gave the rambler a total of eight points today and a season total of 134 points. He was the Nation's leading scorer going into today's game.

Iowa State's second touchdown came in the final seconds of the game. Jerry McGlynn smashed the ball over from the 1-foot line.

Kazmaier Sparks Tigers Offensive

offense, reduced Yale's own running game to a pitiable thing that gained only 27 yards in the first half. The Elis were forced into the air, and then only could they score.

All the Elis had going for them today, with any success, was Stu Tisdale's passing from the quarter-back slot of their T-formation, and both their scores evolved when he clicked on long passes in the second quarter.

Tisdale completed 18 of the 35 passes he threw, but even in that department the Tigers had a man in Kazmaier who could out-class Yale's biggest threat. The 175-pound tailback from Maumee, Ohio, completed eight of the ten he threw.

Bewildering the Yale's with their hocus-pocus off the direct pass from center, that included fancy-buck laterals and some tremendous blocking for Kazmaier and Bill Kleinsasser by their backfield mates, Jack Davidson and George Chandler, the Tigers made a shambles of the contest.

They attained perfection on a first-quarter play that produced their second touchdown, when Kleinsasser, the wingback, cut around left end on a reverse and took the ball from Chandler, who had gotten it on Davidson's fake buck into the line. Kleinsasser streaked 65 yards tight-roping the sidelines to get the touchdown.

Kazmaier with his whacks at the Yale ends and his passing had a hand in six of the seven Yale touchdowns to further his bid for All-Americanism and he averaged 8 yards on every rushing attempt. Twice he hit receivers on touchdown plays.

The Elis distinguished themselves defensively in the first five minutes when they twice turned back Princeton scoring threats. The Tigers could achieve nothing after Hickok recovered a pass fumbled by Yale's Woodsum on the Eli 30, and a bit later they stopped a Princeton drive on the 30.

But, gaining the ball for the third time, at midfield, the Tigers scored on five plays. Kazmaier swung outside for 19 yards, and then completed a jump pass to Reed on the Yale 15. Three plays later Kazmaier scored from 3 yards out on a cutback play at right end behind powerful blocking by Davidson and Chandler.

Two minutes later they had the ball again and another touchdown on Kleinsasser's 63-yard gallop set up by the fake into the line and then paying off handsomely on the speed of the little scatback from Alcoa, Tenn.

From their own 46, late in the first quarter, the Tigers launched their third score, with Kazmaier tearing off 12 and 15 yard sprints before completing a 22-yard jump pass to Reed on the Yale 3. On the first play of the second quarter, Davidson powered through the middle for the touchdown that made it 20-6.

And then, all of a sudden, Yale struck back. Sticking exclusively to passes, Tisdale found receivers in Spears, Woodson, Garner and Senay to complete six in a row, the last of which was a 28-yard pitch that Senay took in the five and took home.

The Tigers met that thrust with one of their own—a 79-yard march on 12 plays in which Kazmaier reeled off a 29-yard sprint before pitching to Chandler on the goal line. That score made it 26-6.

Within 38 seconds, however, Yale was back in the ball game with another touchdown. Scored one play after the next kickoff, it was a masterful pitch from Tisdale to Bright, who took the long throw on the Princeton 20, outran Line Backer McPhee, and completed the 54-yard touchdown play.

But that was all the Elis could produce. Thereafter, it was a Princeton parade and the Tigers closed out the half by marching 81 yards to their fifth touchdown. Kleinsasser ripped off 11 yards around end, and on a fake buck lateral that evolved with Chandler keeping the ball, the Tigers Q. B. raced 16 yards to the Yale 19. From that point, Kazmaier hit Kliensasser with a touchdown pass on the goal line.

Beating Is Worst Of Series for Yale

From Yales' 46, the Tigers struck immediately with the start of the second half. On two plays, they covered the distance. A nine yard smash by Patterson was followed with a Kazmaier pass to Reed who took the ball on the 20 and sprinted the last 17 yards untouched.

The rout of the Elis gathered more force midway in the final quarter after Tisdale was smeared by Kurrus for a 15-yard loss on a passing attempt. On his next try, Tisdale saw his pitch settle into the arms of the same Cliff Kurrus, a guard from St. Louis, who ran back his interception to the 50-yard line.

Kleinsasser tore off a nine-yard chunk for the Tigers and then Kazmaier scampered around left deep into Yale territory after taking a wide pitchout. Chandler faked a handoff and stepped up the middle for nine more and Davidson scored up the middle from two yards out.

That's the way it went, mostly, all day.

Whittier Wins Football Title

Whittier won the District of Columbia Elementary School football championship with a 39-0 triumph over Takoma yesterday at Takoma. Eighty-five-pound Wayne Shepherd went 83 yards off tackle for a touchdown and Tom Moffett also scored on a long run —76 yards.

Whittier finished the season undefeated in six games and scored 176 points while holding the opposition to six. Whittier was strictly a running club and did not throw a pass all year.

HAPPY DAY—Two heroes of yesterday's Quantico Marine triumph over Tampa University congratulate each other. Eddie LeBaron (left) had just completed a 99-yard touchdown run when this picture was snapped. Don Ferguson, a short time before, sprinted 30 yards through the opposition to set up another Quantico touchdown. The Marines won, 48-0

Ed LeBaron Paces Rout Of Tampa U.

Led by Quarterback Eddie LeBaron, the Quantico Marines went over, around, and through a dispirited Tampa University football team yesterday to win, 48-0.

Seven thousand fans watched the Marines close their season at George Washington High Stadium with the situation well in hand at all times. It was the Leathernecks' ninth straight win.

LeBaron passed to four touchdowns and ran for another, the latter a twisting, squirming 99-yard run in the third quarter after he was unable to get off a pass in his end zone.

Eddie started the scoring after 5 minutes of the first period had elapsed, hitting Ed Romanowski with a bullet pass on the Tampa 24. Mr. Romanowski scampered over without a hand being laid on him.

Makes Circus Catch

The Leathernecks scored again in the first quarter when Bob McElroy made a circus catch of a Le Baron pass at shoe-top level and went over. The play covered 21 yards.

The LeBaron-McElroy aerial circus accounted for two more tallies in the second quarter after a stubborn Tampa line halted the Quantico ground forces. The first came on a 36-yard pitch two minutes after the second quarter began. The other was a 35-yard toss late in the period.

Tampa made its only two serious threats of the game in the second period. The Spartans marched from their 33 to the Marine 19, where Don Ferguson intercepted John Lohasky's second-down heave to squelch the threat.

A moment later Ray Escobar recovered McElroy's fumble for Tampa on the Marine 27, but the Leathernecks took over on downs as Tampa failed to gain. Quantico led, 28-0, at halftime.

Shortly after the second half started, LeBaron thrilled the crowd with his 99-yard run, during which he covered the length of the field and the width three times as he squirmed out of the grasp of tackler after tackler.

Marine Coach Hal Harwood jerked the first team for the rest of the game, but the Marines continued to score. Dave Kidderhoff raced 62 yards for a touchdown the next time Quantico got the ball. Len Aloy scored the final Marine touchdown in the fourth quarter on an end sweep from the 2, climaxing a 60-yard march.

Cas Ksycewski, former Catholic U. footballer, kicked five of six placements for Quantico.

This Morning . . .

ing for purses totaling nearly $700,000 in 1951.

WHEN SALT LAKE CITY was in the Coast League, baseball men were skeptical of "Salt Lake home runs," attributing their abundance to the thin air of that section. Well, in the latest official college football statistics, the Nation's top four college punters come from Colorado, Nevada and Utah schools . . . on today's pro football front: The Cleveland Browns are 20½ points favorites over the Redskins, the highest odds offered against a Redskin team in the 14 seasons of their Washington history; the Chicago Bears are 14 points over the Forty Niners, the Giants 10½ points over the Colts; the Detroit Lions 13½ points over Green Bay; the Eagles 18 points over the Cardinals; and the N. Y. Yankees and Los Angeles Rams rated at even money . . . the 1912 Olympic medals that were stripped from Jim Thorpe in Stockholm after it was revealed he had played pro baseball, were returned to him at Oklahoma City the other day as a feature of the celebration marking Oklahoma's forty-third year of Statehood . . . Bucky Harris wishes he could be sure the Nats' three draftees from the minors, Shortstop Gene Verble, Outfielder Joe Hazle and Catcher Frank Sacka were not claimed on behalf of the Nats' farm teams . . . Collier's this week calls Chicago Bear End Ed Sprinkle, "The Meanest Man in Football" . . . Paul Arizin, the pro basketball rookie from Villanova, who is crowding Joe Fulks for the label as the Philadelphia Warriors' most valuable player, didn't go out for the high school team until his senior year. And then the coach couldn't be bothered.

THE PROBLEM of what to do with the $975,000 radio-video take from the World Series was settled only temporarily when it was put in the players' pension fund. The fund won't need that much to meet all its obligations in succeeding years, and the series players will set up a howl for a good part of the revenue . . . the city's best football show of the season could be the November 24 game at Griffith Stadium for the high school football championship. Get them tickets early . . . in Ann Arbor, Mich., of all places, Gussie Moran's pro tennis tour hit its high attendance mark to date, a crowd of 4500. She lost nine straight matches to Pauline Betz Addie before her first victory . . . Yankee Pitcher Joe Page is grateful for the rule which holds the maximum salary cut of big leaguers to 25 percent. Off his 1950 performance, his pay could be justifiably halved . . . the failure of some major league clubs to reclaim Mickey Haefner from the Coast League for $10,000 leaves Washington fans saddened . . . if the Red Sox land Lou Boudreau, they would play him at third base and hope that he plays a tune on their short left field wall. Then they'd offer to trade Johnny Pesky to the Nats for Mickey Harris, the relief pitcher they're coveting . . . when he was at Boston, Harris did not hit it off with Manager Joe McCarthy but under Steve O'Neill he would be happy.

THE HIGH TEST of a coach's popularity was noted in the Yale Bowl yesterday when, with his Yale team trailing 33-12 at the half, Herman Hickman heard Eli cheer leaders get a loud "yeah, Herman" from the students. . . . Princeton's crushing victory may start a new trend back to the single-wing by schools that haven't been winning with the T-formation. . . . Princeton Coach Charley Caldwell, who took a fling at big league baseball after starring on the gridiron for the Tigers, likes the single-wing because it gives his team one more blocker in the backfield. . . . The triumphs of Princeton, plus Penn's victory over Wisconsin, have gained a new respect for Eastern college football. . . . Princeton's victories even make Navy look better in the light of its one touchdown defeat by the Tigers earlier in the season.

Navy Wins Second, Beating Lions, 29-7

pass completions for 172 yards and Dave Bannerman, rolling up 155 yards rushing in his first full game as an offensive fullback, spearheaded the impressive Navy display.

Zastrow bucked over for the first touchdown and pitched out to Bill Powers for the second. Roger Drew booted a 15-yard field goal to make it 16-7 Navy in the fourth quarter.

Kukowski Intercepts Pass

With 7 seconds left, Navy linebacker Ted Kukowski picked off a back-to-the-wall pass by Columbia's Mitchell Price and galloped 12 yards to score.

The Navy band struck up "Happy Days Are Here Again," and there were still few more happy seconds ahead. On the first play after the ensuing kickoff, Navy's defensive end John Gurski intercepted a desperation pass by Kermit Tracy, and as time was running out, Gurski dashed off 35 yards behind good blocking for the final touchdown.

Columbia's lone score came at the 1:07 mark of the fourth quarter on the end of a 76-yard drive. A one-yard buck by Howie Hanson was the scoring play, and it put Columbia in the thick of the fight, whittling Navy's lead to 13-7.

But with the end of their three-game losing streak in sight, the unyielding Middies drove right back to set up Drew's field goal.

If they hadn't been so wasteful in their early scoring opportunities, the Middies might have had an even easier time of it. The first two times they got the ball, they drove to Columbia's 3 and 4-yard lines without scoring.

The loss was Columbia's fifth against three victories and wiped out the Lions' last hopes of attaining the .500 mark.

Their tackling was slipshod, and their blocking inconsistent. The brightest part of their disappointing afternoon was the spectacular pass catching of End Don McLean, 6 foot 2 inch, 195 pound senior from Euclid, Ohio.

McLean made seven catches, most of them shoestring jobs, for 84 yards. That gave him 33 for the season and broke the old Columbia record of 31, set by Bill Swiacki four years ago.

A fumble by Columbia's crack quarterback Mitchell Price and a recovery by End Bob McDonald set up the first Middie touchdown at the Lion's 46. With 50 seconds left before intermission, Zastrow whipped out three passes, one to Powers and two to Larry Treadwell, and moved the ball to the 1-yard line. Then Zug went over on a quarterback sneak, and Drew converted.

In the early moments of the third quarter, Art Sundry intercepted a pass by Columbia's Tracy at the Lions' 36 and the Middies were goalward bound again. Bannerman smashed to the 10 in three plays and on a wide Zastrow pitchout, Powers barely stayed in bounds to score.

Drew's good placement was nullified when Navy used its hands illegally, and Roger couldn't quite make it from the 25-yard line.

Trailing, 13-0, and with its regular quarterback Price on the bench nursing a sore shoulder, Columbia finally cashed in to score early in the fourth quarter. Tracy was filling in for Price and doing quite well.

He passed to McClean for one first down, got the help of an interference ruling against Navy for another. He sent Hansen through Navy's middle for a third on the Middies' 28.

He pitched out to Vern Wynott for 15 yards, and passed to End Wes Bomm on the 1. Hansen, who once prepped for Navy at Bullis, scored against the Middies with a buck over left guard. Al Ward's conversion was good.

Drew Kicks Field Goal

Navy held on, and with Bannerman, Hauff and Zastrow moving them, the Sailors went 52 yards to Columbia's 8. Drew stepped back to the 15 and place kicked his fourth field goal of the year.

Navy threatened again with a 70-yard push to Columbia's 5 before grinding to a stop. Price tried to pass Columbia out of a hole with seven seconds left, but Kukowski, another Bullis boy, intercepted, and scored his second touchdown of the year.

Gurski got his chance six seconds later by intercepting a Tracy toss and scoring. And that's how Navy cut its deficit in the Columbia series to eight wins against nine losses and a tie.

TERPS—From P. 1-C

Terps Rout West Virginia By 41 to 0

to deal the hapless Mountaineers their seventh loss.

There was little for the Mountaineer Stadium crowd of 16,000 to cheer about.

The West Virginians got into Maryland territory only three times all day. The closest they came to scoring was a 51-yard drive which ended with a pass interception on the Terps' 31.

The Terps intercepted six passes, and converted three of them into touchdowns. They also reclaimed five Mountaineer bobbles and two recoveries led to touchdowns. A 31-yard drive, which stemmed from a short West Virginia punt, paved the way for the sixth Terp touchdown.

In addition to Shemonski, halfback Modzelewski and Ed Fullerton, who was feared out for the season with a leg injury two weeks ago, also scored for Maryland. Modzelewski went over twice.

The Terps brought along 60 pairs of tennis shoes, to use in the event of a frozen field, which they feared after last night's snow. The weather, however, was perfect — cool and clear.

It was Maryland's first victory in Morgantown in the history of the nine-game series. The triumph brought Maryland's record in the renewal to three victories against three defeats. Two games ended in ties.

Dropkicker Gene Simmons, whose 12-yard field goal beat Maryland, 16-14, here two years ago, didn't even get into today's game. He also kicks extra points for the Mountaineers, but there was never an opportunity for him to exercise his skill today.

The most spectacular touchdown of the day came in the third quarter when halfback Lou Bonato of the losers lateralled to Bob Shemonski in the end zone. Bonato attempted to bat down a 31-yard pass from Maryland's Jack Scarbath. With Shemonski about five yards behind him, Bonato leaped, batted Scarbath's pass backwards and into the hands of Shemonski, for whom the pass was intended.

The touchdown probably would have never happened if tackle John Bove hadn't touched a Jack Tagarona punt on the West Virginia 28-yard line. Maryland center Tom Cosgrove fell on the ball for Maryland after Bove had touched the 53-yard kick. Two plays later came the Bonato to Shemonski end zone lateral for a touchdown.

Tagarona, incidentally, did some phenomenal punting for the Terps in the first half. His four kicks rolled out of bounds on the West Virginia 1, 8, 5 and 8-yard lines, respectively.

The game was only 3 minutes old when the Terps began the rout. Shemonski intercepted a Bill Allen pass on the West Virginia 38-yard line. Four plays, Maryland scored. Mighty Mo completed a 28-yard pass to Stan Karnish, got 9 at tackle on the next down and bounced into the end zone on the next play for a touchdown.

Elmer Wingate, who recovered two fumbles, started the 20-point second quarter by reclaiming Kent Batge's fumble on West Virginia's 16. Fullerton, after making a first down on the 5-yard line, scored on the next play. Bob Dean, who kicked two of the four extra points, converted to make it 14-0. It was soon 20-0 as tackle Dick Modzelewski scooped up an Allen fumble on the West Virginia 4-yard line. In two plays, Mighty Mo scored.

To make it 27-0 by halftime, the Terps drove all of 40 yards after a Lou Bellas punt rolled out on the Mountaineer 30. Bob Destafeno passed to Pete Augsburger for 13 yards and Shemonski got the touchdown with a nine yard encirclement of end. Shemonski's lateral from Bonato made it 34-0 in the third quarter and Shemonski crashed over from the one in the fourth period after Colyterrans interception to complete the day's scoring.

Stable Mate Seaward 2d In Feature

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

BOWIE, Md., Nov. 18.—Hasty Hour Farm's Inseparable teamed with Jockey Joe Culmone today to win the $10,000 added Thomas K. Lynch Memorial Handicap as this turf plant opened a 13-day meeting.

Riding his 331st winner, the Sicilian youth brought the son of Unbreakable from the far reaches of a field of 10 to take first money.

The victory tied Culome with Jockey Willie Shoemaker, who won only one race at Hollywood Park, in their race for the national riding leadership.

Seaward, Inseparable's stablemate, was second and a nose in advance of Sidney Greenfield's High Trend at the end of the fourteenth running of the handicap, named for one of the men who developed the first racing charts.

In addition to finishing first and second, the entry, owned by Allie E. Reuben, Toledo, Ohio, realtor, appeared to have given High Trend the one-two punch approaching the wire. Many in the crowd of 10,612 wondered why Sam Boulmetis, High Trend's rider, failed to claim a foul.

Culmone's presence in Inseparable's saddle, aided in making the entry the favorite, the victory resulting in a $5 win mutuel. The 5-year-old was clocked in 1.47, a second and three-fifths over the handicap record set by Cochise last year.

Prominent in stake circles throughout the year, Inseparable made it 7 victories in 16 tries and upped his 1950 earnings to $88,600.

The entry, except for the fact that High Trend was in the middle, appeared to have been run according to the jockey instructions given by Trainer Harry Trotsek. Seaward, apparently out to kill off front runners, finally disposed of the pacemaker, Duke's Gal.

Inseparable Moves Up

Inseparable was supposed to come from behind at this point and this he did. Culmone had only one horse beaten on the swing to the stretch but roused his mount and the pair came on with a terrific rush through the final straightway.

Culmone rode his first winner in the opening race, a feat that's almost a daily occurrence with him. He brought Jim Arthur's Tampero home at a $9 mutuel and paved the way for a $105.60 mutuel on the daily double combination.

Bowie failed to reach the expected million mark when betting for the day totaled $986,079.

Gonzaga Plays St. John's for Title Today

By Jules Loh

St. John's, undefeated in eight starts, looms as a three to-four touchdown favorite as it takes on Gonzaga this afternoon at 2 p. m. in Griffith Stadium for the Catholic High School city championship.

The game brings together two of the hottest rivals of the metropolitan area. In a traditional game dating back to 1928, Gonzaga has won 15, St. John's 5, and two have resulted in ties.

If not the most powerful local high school team, St. John's is certainly one of the highest scoring seen around Washington in a long time. The Cadets have rolled up a total of 287 points against their opponents' 38.

Gonzaga is sporting a five and four record, and, highly outweighed, will rely on a passing combination of Bill Cody and Ralph Bram to outscore St. John's big line and hard running backs.

St. John's fullback, Tommy Collins, is the Cadet's leading ground gainer, and coupled with a passing attack of Jack Cornell to the ends, Jack Hands and Joe Daly, the St. John's offense constitutes a threat.

Gonzaga will be defending its city championship, which it won by a victory over Wilson last year, after trimming St. John's, 20-12, for the Catholic title.

The game will be previewed by the Catholic Youth Organization city championship between St. Anthony's and St. Michael's, starting at 12:30.

A personal scoring duel will highlight that contest.

Fullback Johnny Renehan of St. Anthony's has scored 17 touchdowns this year, and St. Michael's tailback, Johnny Stoneburner, has accumulated 14, and has had two called back.

This year is the third straight championship St. Anhony's has won in Section Two in four seasons.

They won the city championship in '48, beating Blessed Sacrament in the playoff, and were runnerup to the same team last year.

St. Anthony's will be a two-touchdown favorite in the game, operating out of a polished T-formation, with Quarterback Bud Facchina doing the ball handling.

Winners in Division One, St. Michael's earned the title with a 6-0-1 record, its only blemish being a tie with Blessed Sacrament.

Culmone Got His Cue In Jersey Pool Room

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

IN THE DAYS of my boyhood gang, "The Little Potatoes, Hard to Peel," my Pop caught me coming out of the neighborhood pool room.

Needless to say he reached for a stick and without going into gruesome detail, I saw the next three episodes of "Perils of Pauline" from an upright position in the rear of the movie and the standing-room-only sign wasn't out, if you know what I mean.

After that one-sided hot-war, Pop opened a cold war, condemning pool rooms as "dens of iniquity," and warning me, "No good comes to boys who hang around those places."

But as anyone who has read Horatio Alger will tell you, the spark of success often sputters in strange places, so it was with Joe Culmone, the "hottest jockey" the east has seen in years.

Perhaps young Culmone would have gotten around to being a jockey in due time, but it is true that a pool room was an accessory before the fact, in getting his saddle career under way.

As war refugees, the Culmone family came to this country in 1945. The father became a naturalized citizen a year later and settled his brood in Atlantic City. Young Joe, who took a dim view of sun bathing, spent his leisure hours in a pool room.

One afternoon, above the click of billiard balls, Joe heard a babble coming over the radio and asked, in his then pidgin English, what was going on. Informed it was a horse race, Joe smiled and remarked, "Horses—I ride them in the old country."

He was not long in getting a chance to prove it. He was introduced to Trainer Frank Bonsal, and was soon in the saddle. Culmone was quicker to discover there was a difference between thoroughbreds and the horses he used to ride on Papa Culmone's farm near Dellia, Sicily.

Bonsal knew no Italian and Joe knew little English. Officials told young Culmone to get some experience and grounded him. Joe was not to stay down for good. He was introduced to Trainer Tony Mazzeo, who not only understood Culmone's language but also improved his English and eventually his riding.

Racing threw Joe once but the second time out he took a strangle hold. He rode his first winner at Monmouth Park in June, 1949, and a year later, with his apprenticeship at end, he had piloted 109 winners.

Upon reaching the journeyman stage of their career and losing the precious weight allowances, many boys have to start anew. Not so with Culmone. In fact, when on even terms with the veterans, Joe improved.

It has been his steady development that has carried him into his head and head battle with West Coast Willie Shoemaker for the 1950 jockey championship.

How come? Joe says, "I got lucky." Racegoers, who back him regardless of his mounts, disagree. They say the kid has a sixth sense, having a knack of rating and timing horses that is uncanny.

Horses simply "run for him," they'll tell you. He seems to be at home on a front-runner as on a come-from-behind. As a finisher, all hands admit, he ranks with the top riders of modern turf history.

Asked to explain his methods, Joe says, "I ride to win, that's all, shrugging his shoulders as much as to ask, "Is there any other way?"

At 19, Culmone moves around the jockey's room as gracefully as a ballet dancer. He isn't stocky in build, but is solid with his 107 pounds well distributed. Doll-like is not the right definition of his facial appearance. However, it is youthful and belies the fact that he is a national figure.

Leaving for the paddock, Joe cocks to one side some of his black curls showing above one ear, and walks with the air of a man who knows he's good.

Culmone doesn't deny he's a champion. Strangely enough, his fellow riders don't seem to resent him. They accept his riding ability as proven and his confidence as justified.

He is cocky without being swell-headed, and is not overwhelmed by developments. Success has brought money, good living, etc., but Culmone seems to regard it as the inevitable.

Joe married a little Italian-American girl a few weeks ago, and hopes some day to have a big family and become a horse trainer.

I can't help wondering if Joe Culmone will have a son and what he will do if he catches the boy coming out of a poolroom? Perhaps he'll put his arm over the kid's shoulder, go back in with him and challenge him to a game of nine-ball.

Ramos to Box Clayton

Luis Ramos will head the card at Turner's Arena tomorrow night in a 10-round bout with Marshall Clayton, former all-Army lightweight champ.

Both are punchers, loaded with power, more adept at taking the offensive than ducking. Clayton has won 14 of his last 16 fights. Ramos has won 9 out of 12, including the fight that stopped Jackie O'Brien's 36-bout winning streak.

The semifinal brings together Eddie Marshall and Johnny Pratt in an eight-rounder. Two weeks ago Marshall and Pratt fought a vicious punching duel which ended in a draw. Marshall was floored three times and Pratt twice. At the end of the fight, both were almost unable to stand.

A pair of five-rounders brings together Eddie Gilchrist, featherweight, and Alex Zambres of Phoenix, Ariz., and Irish Tim Dalton, Chicago lightweight, vs. Jimmy Sewell of the District.

Coffey Wilkins and Willie Giles will open the show at 8:45 p. m. in a four-round preliminary.

Caps Set Record in 118-75 Win

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

The Washington Caps, tired of their unenviable position as doormat of the National Basketball Association, exploded all their dormant offensive power last night and soundly thumped the Fort Wayne Pistons, 118-75, at Uline Arena.

The Caps' 118 points broke the all-time scoring record at Uline Arena, the former record being 106 points for the Caps against the Philadelphia Warriors on January 10, 1948.

The victory broke a four-game losing streak and was doubly sweet because the Pistons trounced them, 87-73, two weeks ago at Fort Wayne.

The Caps loked like anything but tailenders before 1150 delighted customers. Their marksmanship from both the field and the free throw line was deadly and Cap ballhawks demoralized Fort Wayne.

Dick Schnittker and Freddie Scolari with 20 points each, and Bill Sharman and Al Sawyer with 14 led the parade of Washington scorers.

Don Otten, seven-foot center used his height effectively and controlled the ball from the backboards for the first time this season.

The ailing veteran Johnny Norlander returned to the lineup and made 10 points.

Freddie Scolari put the Caps ahead, 3-0, on a field goal and a free throw, then Fort Wayne ran up a 19-10 advantage.

Schnittker, Scolari and Ace Maughan cut the Pistons' lead with 10 points to make it 21-20, Fort Wayne.

Shortly after the second quarter opened, the Caps gained the lead and kept it, and were ahead, 48-40, at halftime.

In the third quarter, the Caps poured 31 points through the hoop, while holding Fort Wayne to 16.

This afternoon the Caps will try to keep their winning streak alive against the league-leading Boston Celtics in Beantown. Washington has a record of three victors and six defeats—which still puts them at the foot of the class in the NBA.

later Billy Vessels went over from the 4 and Jim Weatherall kicked his first of five conversions.

Less than two minutes later, Saftey Man Buddy Jones sprinted 50 yards for the sooner's first punt return touchdown of the season.

Heath, brushing off tacklers like mad, went 22 yards for a second period touchdown, and Vessels made it 27-0 shortly before the half by diving 2 yards for a score set up by a Tiger fumble.

The Sooner reserves took over in the second half. Missouri scored in the fourth period when Quarterback Phil Klein passed 10 yards to Bob Henley, the third straight completed pass in a series totaling 50 yards.

Oklahoma's terrific line play, led by Jim Weatherall, Frankie Anderson and Norman McNabb showed up in the rushing statistics—Oklahoma 261 yards, Missouri 60.

Cup Game Field Cut to 10 Teams

The field of eligible teams for the Presidential Cup football game was cut to 10 last night by the American Legion, sponsor of the contest to be held December 9 at University of Maryland Stadium. It is expected that a final decision on the selections will be made by Tuesday.

There was no hint of the identity of the teams under consideration except that intersectional opponents probably would get the bid. It was previously disclosed that members of the Big Ten, Pacific Coast and "Ivy" League were not available.

DEAR FOLKS: AT BOWIE

Two of Culmone's Maryland rivals, Auggie Catalano and Frank Bone, have decided to leave these parts for Florida and will rest up until the Tropical Park meeting opens. Bone left last night, but Catalano may have to stay here until Monday to ride Well Well in the fourth race, the horse being trained by his contract holder.

Catalano rode 16 winners at Pimlico and the Arlington boy looks like the best saddle prospect to come from the Washington area since Sonny Workman. Racegoers are still talking about Auggie's stretch battles with Culmone at the Baltimore track. He held his own with the champion whenever they met. Bone goes into vacation as the Nation's third leading rider. He has plenty of ability and made the most of his mounts at Pimlico. See you on the rail.

Irish Yield 2 Scores, Fight Back to Tie Iowa, 14-14

TCU Beaten, 21-7

Texas Wins Cotton Bowl Berth, 21-7

FORT WORTH, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—The Texas Longhorns smashed stubborn Texas Christian University, 21-7, today and roared into the New Year's Day Cotton Bowl game as Southwestern Conference champion.

Two lightning fourth-quarter touchdowns snapped a 7-7 deadlock, and Rice's 21-13 victory over Texas A. and M. wrapped up the championship and the bowl bid for the Longhorns.

The fired-up Horned Frogs of Texas Christian, paced by their fine little quarterback, Gilbert Bartosh, fought the Longhorns stubbornly and tied up the game early in the third period.

But in the final period a 79-yard quick kick by Byron Townsend put TCU in a deep hole and when Texas took over on the return punt the Steers were on the Horned Frogs' 34-yard line. In eight plays they had a touchdown, with Townsend scoring from the 1.

Moments later Bobby Dillon intercepted John Norton's pass and raced 46 yards for the score that clinched the game.

Ben Tompkins, who kicked three extra points for Texas, tallied the Longhorns' first touchdown in the second quarter.

Bobby Jack Floyd's line smash and Homer Ludiker's extra point tied the score for TCU in the third period.

Regardless of how Texas fares in its final conference game of the year against A. and M., the championship goes to Texas, only team with a perfect record in league play. All others have lost two or more games.

Rice Topples Texas A & M

COLLEGE STATION, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—Rice upset Texas A&M today, 21-13, to hand the Southwest Conference championship and Cotton Bowl host spot to Texas.

Rice bottled up Bob Smith, the great Aggie fullback, as he had not been stopped before this season.

Rice marched 61 yards to a touchdown with the opening kickoff, Billy Durkhalter scoring from the 6. In the second period the Aggies scored on an 8-yard pass to Andy Hillhouse from Dick Gardemal.

In the third, Rice's George Glauser went 16 yards for another score. As the fourth period opened the Owls stampeded 52 yards. Sonny Wyatt rammed center from the Aggie 1 and Bill Wright kicked his third extra point.

Taking the kickoff on their 46 after a good runback by Billy Tidwell, A.&M. thundered virtually unhindered to score with Tidwell going through center from the 12.

Montgomery Bows, 33-18

Steavens Trade School of Lancaster, Pa., defeated Montgomery Junior College, 38-18, on the Bullis High field yesterday, scoring in every quarter.

Bob Cushman tried hard to give Montgomery a victory before a homecoming crowd, but his three-touchdown output could not match the strong Steavens' team which won its eighth game in nine starts.

Cushman scored in each of the last three quarters for Montgomery, which ended its season with a 4-4 record. He made jaunts of 28 and 5 yards, and caught an 18-yard scoring pass from Quarterback Paul Smith.

Three of Steavens' touchdowns came on long pass plays by Quarterback Steve Krawizchi. He twice hit Marvin Beck for first quarter scores, the plays covering 73 and 80 yards. In the third period he hit John Zuby with a 30-yard touchdown aerial.

Larry Davis tallied the other Steavens' six-pointers, on 1 and 11-yard end runs. Krawizchi kicked three extra points in five attempts.

Episcopal Downs St. Paul's in Baltimore

Episcopal High scored two touchdowns in both the second and fourth quarters yesterday to topple St. Paul's in Baltimore, 27-12.

After Jim Thorenton scored early in the second quarter, Frank Boxly threw a 34-yard touchdown pass to Pete Van Blareon to give the visitors a 14-0 halftime lead.

George Troutman tallied the first St. Paul six-pointer when he scooted 55 yards after intercepting a pass. Jim Britt gave the home team their second and final score in the fourth period just before Harry Spring and Jere Michael added a score apiece for Episcopal from two yards out.

Notre Dame's 80-Yard Push Earns Draw

IOWA CITY, Iowa, Nov. 18 (AP). Iowa and Notre Dame entertained a capacity crowd of 52,863 fans today with a vicious football duel that ended in a 14-all tie.

It was Notre Dame that had to roar back to get the deadlock. The Irish were struck by two first-quarter Iowa touchdowns, then settled down to a long, uphill grind that finally squared the battle.

At the finish it was Iowa that appeared to be willing to settle for the tie. The Hawks let the clock run out with 10 seconds to go on a fourth down on the Nottre Dame 45-yard line.

Iowa Scores 2 in First

Iowa, seeking to upset Notre Dame for the first time since 1940, hit a terrific opening pace. The Hawks recovered a fumbled Irish pass in the air and they were on the Notre Dame 25-yard line. A touchdown came on Don Commack's 13-yard run with only 2:46 gone.

The second Iowa touchdown came with 4:20 left in the first period. Joe Paulsen hugged home a Notre Dame pass on the Irish 38 and rumbled to the 27. A 15-yard penalty hurt the Hawks, but they came back to score on a 26-yard pass play, Glenn Drahn to Bob Wilson. The Iowa halfback made a fancy catch on the 16 and was away for the touchdown. Bill Reichardt converted for a 14-0 Iowa lead.

There were rosy dreams for Iowa fans. They visioned something similar to Iowa triumphs over Notre Dame in 1921, 1939 and 1940.

However, Notre Dame, lacking the physical capabilities of former great Notre Dame teams but blessed with the customary fighting Irish hearts, disturbed Iowa's hopes with a rousing comeback.

Mazur Passes for Score

John Landry gave Notre Dame its first big lift with at 42-yard spurt to the Iowa 20 in the second period. It became fourth and seven for the Irish but John Mazur passed to John Petitbon for 11 yards to the 6. Petitbon hit for 2, then swept Iowa's left end for a touchdown.

Notre Dame got its tie on an 80-yard march on 20 plays in the third period. Bob Williams, the Irish quarterback ace, cunningly mixed passes with line-splitting runs and Bob personally made the score with a drive through center from 2 feet out.

Vince Meschievitz sailed his second conversion through the bars and it was 14-all. That's exactly the way it stayed for the 15 minutes and 24 seconds left in the game.

It was the first tie for Notre Dame since the Irish rallied to deadlock Southern California 14-all in their last game of the 1948 season.

S.M.U. Wins, 14-7 Over Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 18 (AP). Southern Methodist's aerial circus was grounded in the rain and mud today but Bulldozing Kyle Rote powered the Mustangs to a 14-7 Southwest Conference victory over the Arkansas Razorbacks.

The game, an unsensational mud battle most of the way, broke wide open in the fourth quarter as the Razorbacks stormed to one touchdown that counted and to another nullified by a holding penalty. The penalty brought on a cushion shower from the crowd of 29,000.

Rote sloshed for 79 yards on 25 carries and did S.M.U.'s most successful passing. Made 22 of the 30 yards in S.M.U.'s first touchdown drive, plowing across from 7 yards out.

A few minutes later Rote herded the Mustangs 76 yards for the winning tally. He passed twice for 15 yards and got off runs of 24 and eight yards. From Arkansas' 17, Bill Forester crossed the goal line standing.

W & L Stops Louisville By 33-28

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 18 (AP).—The Generals of Washington and Lee survived a wild-scoring second half here today to outlast the University of Louisville, 33-28.

Louisville, trying hard to follow up its surprise 13-13 tie with Miami last week with another major upset, came from behind a 20-0 halftime deficit to push the issue to the final gun.

But the Southern Conference pace-setters from Lexington, Va., held on for their seventh victory this season.

They unwrapped their big guns in the opening minutes, and, with Gil Bocetti and Walt Michaels measuring off most of the yardage in a well-mixed passing and running attack, built up a 20-0 advantage at the half.

Louisville's stirring comeback featured the passing of Bill Karns

The hometown Cardinals closed in to 20-7 early in the third quarter but saw the gap spread out again to 27-7. After that, the score was 27-14, 27-21 and 33-21 before Louisville came back to make it 33-28 with just over two minutes to play.

The last touchdown was the day's big thriller. With the Cards in possession on their own six, Karns passed from his end zone to Gene Sartini, who made a running catch at midfield and kept going for the score.

Hunting Cottontails Provides Tops in Fun for Hunters

By Ralph Murdock

Murdock

THE MELODY produced by a team of beagle hounds hot on the trail of a cottontail is still the tops in music as far as a rabbit hunter is concerned. To this small game hunter, there's nothing like it. The proof is—there are more gun shells used for rabbit hunting than any other type of hunting.

Early reports from the bunny hunters indicate this species of game is fairly plentiful in southern Maryland. Charles N. Wink and Clarence White of LaPlata, Md., and my brother, Joseph E., got their limit of cottontails on opening day before 2 o'clock in the afternoon—just within three miles of the county seat of Charles County. All were taken with .22 caliber rifles.

The following day, with John Goldsmith pinch-hitting for Charles White, the nimrods bagged eight more of the swifties. Six were killed on a 10-acre plot—literally a honeysuckle patch and always a likely spot to jump a cottontail. The same area offered little sport the previous year.

RAYMOND O. PHIPPS, brother of Louis N. Phipps (recently elected State senator for Anne Arundel County and twice mayor of Annapolis, Md.); his nephew, Gordon F. Phipps, and Nolan Navarre took to the fields near Sutterly, Md., on Friday with three 13-inch beagles.

While hunting on Samuel Parks' farm, they killed five rabbits and three quail. Raymond Phipps stated that there were more bob-whites than rabbits in this area, and that they should have taken bird dogs instead of beagle hounds—several large covies of quail were spotted here.

Memphis State, Of All Clubs, Gives Vanderbilt Bad Scare

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP).—Memphis State College, a name that sounds like a breather on anybody's schedule, gave Vanderbilt a nightmarish three periods today before the Commodores poured through for a 29 to 13 victory.

Until its defenses collapsed, the State team, playing a major foe for the first time had a 13 to 0 upset in the making before 10,000 fans. It had grounded the famed Vandy passing combination of Bill Wade to Bucky Curtis and stopped the rushing attack as well.

But in the fourth period, Vanderbilt got going with numbing suddenness. Wade, Jim Tabor and Dick Foster smashed across for scores, with Tabor tallying twice.

Memphis State scored on a first period one-foot plunge by Fullback Alex Williams and again in the second period on a 45-yard pass from John Comm to Frank Berry.

The game was rugged throughout, with penalties liberally applied. State's line play was sharper most of the way, but came unstuck at the end.

Wade and Mac Robinson had worked the ball to the State one when the third period ended. In the next five seconds, Wade carried it over for the first score.

Three minutes later Tabor took a handoff from Wade and went 40 yards for the second score. Gordon McCarter's kick tied it at 13-all.

Tabor plunged across from the three to send Vanderbilt ahead to stay.

Half way through the period, Tabor again sparked a Vanderbilt drive which was capped when Dick Foster bulled over from the one.

Mac Robinson plastered Dick Kirmeyer behind his own goal to add a safety and Vandy's final two points.

Geologists Are Told Of Pre-Folsom Man

New evidence that man lived in America more than 10,000 years ago was disclosed yesterday before the Geological Society of America at its annual meeting here.

Dr. E. H. Sellards, director of the Texas Memorial Museum, told the scientists at the Hotel Statler there now is proof of human existence even earlier than that of the famed Folsom Man.

Anthropologists long have generally agreed that human migrants from northeastern Asia came to North and South America during the glacial ice age. In 1925 and 1927 archeologists uncovered arrows and spearheads of human manufacture associated with an extinct bison near Folsom, N. Mex. Hence it was assumed there were humans in that period, though no human skeleton has been found. This missing man was called the Folsom Man.

Now, Dr. Sellards reported, 1949 and 1950 excavations in eastern New Mexico show an even earlier culture existed. The New Mexico excavations show four cultures, one on top of the other, with the newest one below that of Folsom Man.

Archeologists had suspected that the implements found in this lowest layer were older than Folsom but Dr. Sellards now has reported that the stratification of the excavation proves the difference in ages.

He estimated that the Llano culture (so named because it was found in the "Llano Estacado," or "staked plains" region of Texas as well as in New Mexico) to be not less than 10,000 years old. It is centuries older than Folsom Man, he added.

Instruments of the Llano Man were of bone for the most part.

Venezuela United Despite Killing, Embassy Stresses

No "political significance" should be attacked to the assassination of President Delgado Chalbaud of Venezeula, that country's embassy announced last night. The act was termed "the personal vengeance of a well known scoundrel."

Ambassador Jose Rafael Pocaterra added: "This act is not and cannot be interpreted as a climax for a possible struggle for power, nor will it affect the political unity of the government.. . . . The government will continue towards its goal of advancement of the country, faithful to the ideas which Delgado Chalbaud so well defended and for which he died."

The Venezuelan president was ambushed by 30 assailants and shot to death November 13 at Caracas. The government immediately decreed a state of emergency and suspended civil rights.

Geologists Jibe Each Other In 'Last Days of Pomp'

The lighter side of sedate science was unveiled here last night as the dignified greats and near-greats in geology were lampooned—all in fun.

Occasion was the convention end showing of "The Last Days of Pomp," or "Jason's Golden Fleecing," the annual operetta of Washington's Pick and Hammer Club, the fun branch of geologists.

The sprightly musical comedy, at Lisner Auditorium, climaxed three days of more serious work, the sixty-third annual meeting of the Geological Society of America.

Opening scene of last night's extravaganza was Atlantis City, capital of the mythical continent of Atlantis, which supposedly existed several milleniums before the Christian era.

Atlantis City Target

Zeus, Greek god of all gods; Poseidon, ruler of the ocean, and Pluton, keeper of Hades, have travelled to Atlantis City, and are worried over a new cult of Geosophists (geologists) worshipping the false god, Lithos (Greek for stone).

In the midst of pompous scenes intended to poke fun at distinction of rank among geologists, Jason appears, displays his golden fleece (prominently labeled Ph.D.), and admits to being a non-member of Gamma Sigma Alpha (GSA).

He has a research project concerning the "Origin of the Earth." But the backers he wants are too concerned over a technical paper on "Uncertainties in the Methods and Procedures of Expressing Doubt," and other similar projects.

As they assign him to impossible quests, they break into song, to the tune of "Pretty Baby":

Everybody loves a doctor, that's why I'm in love with me.
Call me Doctor. Call me Doctor.
And whenever you address me, don't forget the Ph. D.
Call me Doctor, Call me Doctor.
For I'm just a little better than the average sort of man.
Could ever hope to be
So in grateful recognition, all you lesser mortals can Call me Doctor—that's me.

Before approving Jason's "Origin of the Earth" project, the geologic powers ask his matrimonial standing and intentions. He admits he isn't married, but has a girl he "dreams about." He sings:

The girl that I marry will have to be Independent financially
The girl I make my bride
Must take shorthand, do typing, and cook on the side.
In lectures and classes my notes she'll take,
And type my papers with no mistakes;
'Stead of yearning, she'll be earning,
And she'll pay all my way while I'm learning.
A good secretary
The girl that I marry must be.
The girl that I marry will have to be
As strong as any in history;
The girl I take for mine
Must think hiking and hauling and camping are fine.
She'll carry my duffle, the dear old ox,
And pack my fossils and ores and rocks;
'Stead of shirking, she'll be working.
While nearby at my leisure I'm lurking.
A sweet "fetch and carry"
The girl that I marry must be.

Jason's quests include finding "a sample of the original magma" (from which the earth was formed); a specimen of the "earth's first fossil," and some "cosmic dust from the outer atmosphere" (some theories hold that the earth and other planets were born through cosmic pressure upon clouds of interstellar dust.)

The scene of Jason's visit to the oracle is reminiscent of the witches' cauldron scene from Macbeth. To the tune of "Music, Music, Music," three men in dark-colored robes sing:

Drop another crystal in
To the mixture alkaline
That's the way that you begin
Granite, granite, granite.
When you get it good and hot,
Put some potash in the pot.
Stir it well until you've got
Granite, granite, granite.
Water, pour in some water—
Your recipe will really be in style,
If the water's juvenile.
In the salts and bases throw
In the pot they all must go;
When it's finished, out will flow
Granite, granite, granite.

But there is opposition to the recipe. And a representative of the opposition sings, to the tune of "K-K-K-Katy:"

Granitization
Granitization
That's the only theory I adore
I am a juicer
And a producer
Of papers, manuscripts and treatises galore.
Juices,

In the closing scenes, though Jason has approved his ability to solve impossible problems, the Council of geosophists decide to celebrate his success by offering him to sacrifice to Lithos. "His doctrines are too dangerous," they declare. "We should make an example of this man."

Traffic School Educates 8000 In Two Years

Eight thousand District residents have graduated from the District of Columbia Traffic School since its inception slightly less than two years ago. An estimated 300 others attended but did not receive certificates.

The school conducted by the Metropolitan Police Department Traffic Division to teach safe driving is under the supervision of Sergt. Aubrey S. Yowaiski. Attendance is voluntary but most of the "pupils" are traffic regulation violators who have been referred to the school by the Traffic Court or Board of Revocations and Restorations of Operators' Permits.

Successful completion of the course usually results in restoration of the violator's driver's rights, or lightening of his court sentence.

In recent months more and more non-violators have been attending the school. Currently, all the 160 drivers at the Pentagon Motor pool are attending. Some of their schoolmates are 200 part-time and full-time drivers for the Red Cross. A Marine Corps officer may send his drivers to the school, Sergeant Yowaiski says.

Lieut. Col. A. J. Montgomery, in charge of the Pentagon drivers, has requested them to attend, he says, because most of them are from out of town and not familiar with local regulations.

Classes, each two hours long, are given on Fridays from 8 to 10 p. m. and on Saturdays from 10 a. m. to noon. After six hours of class, each student is given a written examination. If he attains a grade of 70, he is given a certificate and his record is sent to the agency that referred him.

Curriculum is divided into lecttures and safety films. Lectures are given by officials of the Traffic Division, each of whom specializes in a different subject. During the lectures, accident situations are illustrated on a magnetic board with the use of miniature cars.

What to do with those that have attended the school and still repeat the violation is a problem being considered by traffic officials now. Last July a student who had attended the school twice—once as a juvenile and then after he became of age, struck a tree and was killed less than a month after he had graduated. Investigation showed he had been drinking and speeding.

Sergeant Yowaiski stresses the fact the Traffic Division wants everyone to attend whether he has a permit or not. He explains that most traffic fatalities here are pedestrians. A 10-year survey showed that 9 out of 10 of the pedestrians who were killed did not have a driver's permit.

"They have no conception of what a driver of a car thinks about or how he reacts." Yowiaski said. "Also they have no idea what a car can do—most of them think cars can perform miracles.

"We try to teach our students safe walking habits as well as driving habits."

Of all the pupils who attend, Yowaiski says, the women make the best students.

Yowaiski is a former motorcycle policeman of 10 years' experience who knows the practical side of enforcing traffic regulations. He was injured in a motorcycle accident in 1945 and after three major operations and 13 months in a hospital he returned to the police department in 1947. He took over command of the school September 1, 1949.

End of Discrimination In Employment Urged

The National Council of Negro Women yesterday urged President Truman to end discrimination in employment.

The council's annual convention, attended by 300 women, adopted a resolution which suggested that the President "use every means within your great powers to implement your already stated policies on nondiscrimination in employment.

Fides House To Conduct Fund Appeal

Fides House, a neighborhood settlement under Catholic auspices, will conduct an appeal beginning Monday and running through December 3, it was announced yesterday.

The funds will be used to provide meeting rooms, crafts and game rooms and other needed facilities at the settlement house, used by 1000 Negro children.

To assist in the settlement program, a new organization "Friends of Fides House" has been formed, it was announced.

In a message to this group, Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington, said he was "happy to indorse its present appeal."

"The great expansion of this work has made such assistance urgently necessary," the archbishop said. "Fides House must depend upon the generosity of its friends to carry on its growing program of constructive educational, recreational and spiritual activities in a wholesome environment for children from poor neighborhoods.

"Becoming a friend of Fides House is one practical way of fulfilling everyone's obligation to participate in the spiritual and corporal works of mercy. I heartily commend this worthy cause to all who are eager to follow the Divine Commandment: 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.'"

"Fides" is a Latin word meaning "faith." Director of Fides House is Dr. Mary Elizabeth Walsh, professor of sociology at Catholic University.

Hoyas Upset Holy Cross by 21-14

HOYAS—From P. 1-C

caught by Gallo on the 8-yard line. Three plays later Gallo was in the end zone.

Chaney Gets Warmed Up

But Charney was just getting warmed up. He took a punt at midfield on the dead run and swept 29 yards to the Holy Cross 21. He just missed going all the way, but the punter, Mel Massucco, made the saving tackle.

From the 21, Charney tore wide and went 13 yards. He took it again for 5 more and Terry Murphy went the 8 yards to the goalline. Here Holy Cross held Murphy and Pagluica. On fourth down, though, Mattingly pitched a touchdown pass to End Dick Losh.

That was at 9.57 of the second period and 4 minutes later, Georgetown was going goalward again. And Charney was heading them in that direction. Ralph, slated for the right halfback spot before an appendectomy put him on the sidelines before the season started, was running like a champ from the left halfback post.

From his own 31, Charney got into the clear and dashed 30 yards. Mattingly then hit Losh for a 13-yard gain to the Holy Cross 26.

Charney picked up 7 more. Here Mattingly crossed up the Crusaders by giving Terry Murphy the ball. Murphy shook off a half-dozen tacklers and went 19 yards for the touchdown. It was a good, hard run right through the middle.

Charney, a real find today, gained 103 yards in 15 tries.

Haesler Converts Three

Dick Haesler, who was hurt and missed the Fordham game that Georgetown lost, 14-13, made all three conversions. That boosted his mark to 23 of 24 extra-point attempts.

This Holy Cross team is truly a Jekyll-Hyde club. On defense it looked terrible; on offense it was an entirely different story. Then in the second half, the defensive club got totugh, too. It was too late by then, though.

Johnny Turco and Paul Gallo, two hard-running backs, were making yardage on the ground and Charlie Maloy began to find the range with his aerials in the second half.

They could reach the end zone only once though. That was late in the third period when Turco took a punt on his 33 and gave a handoff to Gallo who went 38 yards to the Hoya 29.

Then on third down from the Georgetown 14, Maloy threw a picture pass that End Tom McCann speared in the end zone.

Holy Cross went into the game with an average of 25 points a game. It took some great defensive play to hold the Crusaders to two touchdowns. In addition to Hardiman, Bob Versprille, Bob Noppinger, Joe Pallotta, Bernie Keleher and Jim Schenk stood out. Schenk made a recovery of a Holy Cross fumble late in the game that helped break its back. Hardiman really applied the crusher.

Interested spectators at the game were G. W. coaches Bo Rowland, Bo Sherman and Tim Swett. If G.W. doesn't win the big one at Griffith Stadium next Saturday, it won't be because Georgetown wasn't scouted.

MEN

If you are employed and earning less than $75 per week and reading these ads because you would like to better yourself and think you would like to be a Salesman but have been afraid to accept a commission job, due to lack of confidence in your ability; been refused salary job because you did not posses enough experience or training, then it would probably be worth your while to write a letter giving full information about yourself; since we will select 30 men to enroll in a sales training class which will take 2 evenings a week of your time, and would cost you a lot of money if you would attempt to go out and buy this training elsewhere, if it were available. There will be a number of men who, after they have successfully completed this training course, will be given an opportunity of a permanent job with our company; although this training will not obligate you in any way to work for our company. After this training, you will be privileged to walk out with a diploma that will help you gain employment in your chosen field. These classes will be conducted by qualified instructors whom are being paid over $10,000 a year. Write at once if interested to WHEATON AREA—Lot ½ acre with trees, level; near schools, transp., shopping. Call WI. 8907.

500 ACRES located about 4 blocks beyond the District line in the zone of the new South Capitol St. Bridge. 100 acres already sold. This bridge is operating now with a capacity of 50,000 automobiles a day. Sears & Roebuck has just bought a large tract over here for a department store and I understand that they are negotiating for another big tract on another road leading right into my property for another department store. The Hot Shoppe has just bought a little over an acre right near my acreage for 150,000. Shopping centers on the Virginia end of the 3 bridges are worth a million dollars an acre. When I built Chevy Chase, D. C., some of the land I paid $3000 an acre for is now worth a million dollars an acre. I made a modest profit but my customers made the big profit. There is no reason why this property in the South Capitol St. Bridge area when the shopping area is completed will not be worth from one to two million dollars an acre someday. Fulton R. Gordon, owner, reach me at OL. 4408. Brokers' attention.

IT SEEMS like sitting on the top of the world. I am on a big hill, setting back 500 feet from the Congressional Club on River rd. This hill is about 600 ft. wide, about 1000 ft. deep and furnishes the finest setting for a home in this part of the United States. It gives you a thrill every time you turn in to the road to see the beautiful white house on the hill, it looks like Mt. Vernon, although it has a better setting than George Washington's house in Mt. Vernon. People stop at the gate and take pictures of the property, it is so beautiful. This property is not for sale. It is my home. I have another 40-acre hill adjoining it that has as fine a setting for a home as this hill. That's where they ought to build the White House. The present house where President Truman lives has a very poor setting—it is flat, you can't make a nice setting without a hill—therefore the President should live on the adjoining hill to mine and use it, if desired. Ever-lovely. Free parking. Inspection invited. You will find more things here in our large display room than at some antique shows or auctions. "Washington's Large Antique Dealer." Fairfax Polishes Up Its Heirlooms—and Its Memory of Things Past . . .

Photos by Charles Del Vecchio—The Washington Post

Antique Show, Homes Tour Inaugurated

By Nicha Searle

IN FAIRFAX there's a lot to remember!

And to bring this memory into the present, Fairfax women are bringing out their best heirlooms and ransacking their attics for precious articles of bygone days.

Reason for all this flurry is the Fairfax Heirloom Show and Homes Tour on November 25. Sponsored by the Fairfax Historical Society, the show will bring out of hiding the best and most treasured antiques in the county.

When Fairfax folk view the show they will learn that this is the beginning of a great "know-Fairfax" campaign. Money realized from the show will be used by the society to place historical markers throughout the county. Not only will Fairfax residents rediscover their own past, but visitors henceforth will get an inkling of the vast amount of historical lore in the county.

IT'S A TREMENDOUS undertaking, but the society has the enthusiastic backing of new and old residents. A great many of the families have lived there all their lives as have their fathers before them all the way back to Revolutionary days. These native Virginians are proud of their history and this pride in the Old Dominion has infiltrated into the new families that have moved to Fairfax County.

Did you know, they'll ask you, that the first Confederate soldier was killed right here at the present town site? That's right! His name was Capt. John Marr, and he was killed on June 1, 1861, right behind the courthouse.

Have you ever noticed that Mrs. Walter Tansell Oliver's front door doesn't have a key? That's because the Yankees took it in the War Between the States.

You've heard, of course, the story of Captain Mosby's famous raid. You haven't? You must be a stranger around here. Well, it all happened this way:

MISS ANTONIA FORD, a Confederate spy, got word somehow to Captain Mosby that the Yankee General Stoughton was staying at the Rectory. Now General Stoughton, in charge of an entire Yankee regiment, would be a feather in the cap of Captain Mosby if he could be captured.

Mosby's men (only about 20) took the Yankee soldiers in a daring night raid while Mosby went over to the Rectory to capture the general. Overpowering the guard, he made his way to the Yankee general's room. The general was sleeping. Mosby walked over to the bed, jerked down the covers, pulled up the general's nightshirt and gave him a slap.

The general quickly sat up in bed. "What's the meaning of this?" he demanded.

"Have you ever heard of Mosby?"

"Yes! Have you got him?"

"No," said Captain Mosby, "he's got you."

Took a lot of nerve to do it, Fairfax people will tell you, but that's the kind of men who made Fairfax history.

JUST TO GIVE YOU an idea how much Fairfax people are interested in their county's past, take the history of the Historical Society.

On February 22 a group of 28 women had lunch at Woodlawn and formed the society. They appointed a full-time director, Thatcher Paris, and incorporated the society. They opened their offices on October 1 and today the society has 500 members with more waiting to get in.

This first big function of the society, the Heirloom Show, will give visitors a close-up of places to which Fairfax points with pride.

The show itself will be held in the Truro Episcopal Church Rectory where Captain Mosby captured the Yankee general. Mrs. Oliver's home, the one with no front door key, will be on the homes tour as will the courthouse, where the original wills of George and Martha Washington are kept.

MRS. KATHERINE BARRETT POZER'S home, formerly a tavern called "Erp's Ordinary," will be open to the public. It was there George Washington stayed when, as a young man, he surveyed "the upper country" for Lord Fairfax. Yes, George Washington slept there!

At Swallow Barn, the home of the director of the society and Mrs. Thatcher Paris, tea will be served to persons making the Fairfax home tour. Visitors will have a chance to see the portrait of Levin Powell, great-great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Paris, who deeded 20,000 acres of land to the county which was later to become Middleburg.

Mrs. Oliver, minus a front door key, sums up the way old Fairfax families feel about their homes:

"They're inconvenient with their high ceilings and old floors and the lack of heat which always has to be installed. They have no pushbuttons for lights, only draw strings. My fourteen rooms are a problem without a maid in these servantless days.

"But an old house has a soul and they're worth twice the trouble they create."

FAIRFAX HEIRLOOMS—Mrs. Thatcher Paris (left) examines Mrs. Walter Tansell Oliver's lustre teapot dating back to about 1790. Mrs. Oliver's Fairfax County home, which boasts an exceptionally fine woodwork mantel, will be one of the homes on the Heirloom Show tour on November 25. The clock on the mantel is an antique, as are the Victorian dogs

HISTORIC LETTERS—Thatcher Paris shows Mrs. Lisle Smith a group of letters which the Fairfax Historical Society owns. This one is a letter to George Washington from Col. Charles Simms, one of the first mayors of Alexandria and one of George Washington's pallbearers. Colonel Simms served on Washington's staff

COLONIAL DRINK—Mrs. Charles D. Hamel (left) and Mrs. Thomas C. Barringer demonstrate the function of a flip glass. Back in Colonial days a hot rum punch was served in these glasses. It was made by pouring rum in the glass, adding sugar, and then stirring the mixture with a hot poker for the bubbling rum drink

Mary Haworth's Mail

After Six Years' Friendship With Boy Next Door, Girl Proposes Marriage to Him and He Reluctantly Consents; Her Parents Predict Unhappiness Ahead

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I plan to be married in January to a young man whom I love very much. My parents are strongly opposed to the marriage. They say it will never work. It's not that they dislike Ben; he and my father have been good friends almost from the day they met, despite a generation's difference in their ages.

I guess I had better start at the beginning to tell the story. Almost six years ago my parents moved here from the West Coast. They bought a good home in a nice but not well-to-do neighborhood. Ben was living with his widowed mother in the house next door, and we got acquainted almost at once. His father was killed in an accident when Ben was a child.

Ben was in high school and so was I when we met. While we were in school, and for almost a year after we graduated, Ben and I dated steadily. Then he began to drift away from me and, after a few months, he became engaged to a girl—I'll call her Dorothy—who worked in the office where he is employed. But three days before their wedding date, Dorothy eloped with another man.

Ben's mother died two years ago and since then he has been living alone in the home. After Dorothy eloped he seldom spoke of her, but he is still in love with her and has told me that he could never love anyone else as he loves her. After being jilted he didn't date for a long time, just spent his leisure around the house. In the past year we have dated a good deal, however, and three weeks ago I asked him to marry me. Maybe it was the wrong thing to do, but I am sure we can find happiness together.

Ben tells me that, although he is very fond of me, he doesn't love me; but I finally persuaded him that we could be happy together, and the next evening we announced our engagement. My parents say I am being very foolish and making a mistake, but I love Ben very much. Please help me to find the right path. E. C.

DEAR E. C.: It strikes me that your parents' anxious scolding attitude is unduly pessimistic and discouraging. I think they are registering hurt feelings or nettled pride or disappointment of their own hopes for you, rather than voicing indisputable wisdom, when they argue that marriage to Ben won't work, due to your crowding him into the traces.

If every youngish matron on the American scene, who achieved marriage by doing the asking, would stand up and be counted, I'll bet your parents would get an eye-opener. In support of this theory, I submit the views of a respected specialist in human relations, a man of acute perception, whose professional work consists in hearing the emotional histories of assorted, intelligent, cultivated, middle-class clients.

This specialist insists that most men, or rather the majority of "better men," the decent sensitive fellows, marry the woman who seems to want them most. It occurs to me that Abe Lincoln's marriage would be an illustrious case in point.

Says the doctor, "This type of man goes to the highest bidder, and by that I mean, to the woman who confidently offers him the most devotion, attention and interest; and who keeps her heart always open to him, even when he seems wrapped up in emotions that don't include her. Perhaps "confidence" is the key word here.

IF SELF-CONFIDENCE is the key to the woman's success in getting the man she wants, this in turn suggests that she operates from a background of social and emotional security, based on some family money, much family love, satisfactory social status and/or a sufficiency of friends. Thus I surmise it is what the woman symbolizes to the man, of "fullness of life," quite as much as her yen for him, that accomplishes his surrender to her suit. The average man alone, though reluctant to marry — all men are! — nevertheless wants to experience fulness of life, and when he encounters a woman who seems to have tapped the spring, and who, moreover, adores him, his instinct sighs, "What better can you do?"

This approach to marriage may forfeit the tumultuous raptures associated with ardent male capture of an elusive but willing bride; but the chances are 50-50, to say the least, that it will lead to stability and contentment in the relationship over the long haul.

Indeed, it is probable that a matter-of-fact kind of union is a better bet, as an enduring contract, than marriages made for romantic love only,—which is to say, at the goading of sex attraction that takes no preliminary account of other elements indispensable in building and maintaining a good companionship. Someone has said, "Happiness is not for the taking, but for the making,"—and you might keep this as your motto if you marry Ben. M. H.

Mrs. Rosenberg's String of Federal Jobs Impressive

Has Fast Eye for Other Fellow's Difficulty

By Adelaide Kerr

THIS is the kind of person you meet in Anna Rosenberg, the first woman Assistant Secretary of Defense:

When I walked into her office at the close of a day jammed with appointments, Mrs. Rosenberg's gaze went straight to a smudge of fresh paint on my new fall suit.

She cut off all talk of herself and her work and cried "get me the cleaning fluid."

"Please don't bother, Mrs. Rosenberg . . ."

"Nonsense. That paint might set."

Mrs. Rosenberg seized the cleaning fluid and a clean cloth and went to work. She is a little woman, who wears a brace of gold bangled bracelets on each wrist. Her hands flew, the bangles jingled and the smudge gave way.

People who work with Anna Rosenberg tell you the way she tackled that smudge is the key to the way she works—a fast eye for the other fellow's difficulty, and a fast effort to solve it. On it she has built a career as one of the country's most successful counsels to business firms on labor relations and public relations. She has served Uncle Sam and New York State in problems of wartime defense. She has broken labor management deadlocks and settled strikes.

Mrs. Rosenberg, who was sworn in this week as Assistant Defense Secretary on interm appointment pending Senate confirmation, has had an impressive string of Federal jobs. She was regional director of the NRA (1935), of the Social Security Administration (1936-43) and of the War Manpower Commission (1942-45). She served on a number of State and Federal advisory boards and made two important missions to Europe—one for President Roosevelt, the other for President Truman. For the last four years she was a member of the United States National Commission for UNESCO. She has recently been public member of the Committee on Mobilization Policy of the National Security Resources Board.

HER NEW JOB will be to coordinate all manpower and personnel policies of the whole Defense Department.

"My feeling is, we are in for a long pull, and we have to pace ourselves," she said. "The entire population will be needed. I'm for getting every solitary thing for the armed services as fast as they need it. But whatever we do, we have to plan very carefully with civilian agencies, so we don't have dislocation and unemployment—so we don't waste our skilled manpower, both men and women.

"There's no kidding ourselves. There's just one pool. We'll have to divide it between armed forces, military production, civilian defense and civilian needs."

MRS. ROSENBERG, born in Hungary and now a naturalized American citizen, looks younger and prettier than her photographs. Her hair and eyes are dark brown, her color is warm. Her working clothes are smart suits—seasoned with a pretty blouse, the gold bracelets and some accent like a gold flower clip with a diamond heart.

Anna Marie Lederer came to this country with her family when she was a little girl and settled in New York. Before she was out of high school she was breaking up threatened strikes among students. Before she was graduated she was married to Julius Rosenberg, a World War I serviceman, now a rug merchant. They have one grown son John, a World War II veteran, and live in a roomy comfortable Fifth ave. apartment

After the wedding trip Mrs. Rosenberg went back to school for awhile. But she soon got into politics and stopped school. Her political work led her into social welfare work, public relations and labor mediation, where she built up a reputation lightning fast. Both President Franklin Roosevelt and Mayor LaGuardia consulted her on labor problems. After the NRA closed, employers and union business kept calling her for advice, so she established her own counseling business, which now includes among its clients R. H. Macy & Co., J. H. (Jock) Whitney & Co., and Rockefeller Bros.

Yet so far as those who work with her know, Anna Rosenberg never read a single book on labor relations. Her technique is her own—a mixture of intelligence, energy, sympathy, toughness, diplomacy, common sense—and a hard fast smack when she thinks a smack is needed. In one second she can switch from soft-voiced cajolery to the language of a stevedore.

Once she settled a strike of subway electrical workers by putting on hip boots and clomping down underground to see just what kind of work was entailed in a certain kind of controversial job. (None of the negotiators had thought of it.)

ONE MAIN KEY of her labor relations policy is her strong belief that people who have been given a sense of responsibility, service and pride in their work will do a better, faster job.

Since the war she has devoted full time to her private practice, which she runs in a homey, beige-colored office with a bowl of roses on her desk and pictures of modern painters on the wall. While she is Assistant Defense Secretary she will take a leave from her business, which will be run by Irving Berezin, head of her staff.

How does Anna Rosenberg get so much done? Her explanation is simple: "I delegate a tremendous amount of work to people who won't bother me with questions over every little thing. I go out in the field and find out what's going on, so that I know what people are talking about. But after that I give authority and leave it until I find it's misplaced. You can get a lot done if you give other people credit for what they do."

Ask the Girl Who Wears Them

Fashion Comes a la Carte via Separates

By Evelyn Hayes

YOU CAN TELL A GREAT DEAL about the fashion status of particular clothes by the people who wear them. Take fashion models, for instance. Their stock in trade is looking smart every day, every time of day. They can't afford to be caught with their glamour down—and yet few of them can afford the expensive couture clothes usually associated with a fashion plate look. The answer? Most models solve their fashion problems via separates.

Fashion models know that by buying separates—i. e. blouses, jackets and skirts—they can combine them into costumes of great chic and more individuality than they could achieve or afford if they simply bought a dress for this, another for that, and so on.

Chase-Statler Photo Studios have pictured for us here several good cases in point. Take the long skirt, for example—a stunning version of the new trumpet silhouette with velvet bows accentuating the new line. Very smart as ensembled here with a white blouse with velvet and jet applique—it would look equally smart and more formal if worn with the velvet halter shown in another picture. That same halter would make still another dress if ensembled with the fishnet skirt with velvet sash. And so it goes—ad infinitum. The possibilities of expanding a wardrobe of separates are limited only by your imagination! Try this new way of dressing—it's good fashion—good fun—and easier on the finances.

AFTER-FIVE FASHION TRIO—Three after-dark separates—a velvet halter—coin-dotted net apron to wear over any sheath (aprons are fashion news!)—and a champagne faille sheath (this skirt an amazing $7.95!) all combined to make a head-turning short evening ensemble! In Kentucky, It's Great Grandma Porter

By George Reynolds

(Great-Grandma Porter, 86-year-old artist of Winchester, Ky., whose unusual story is told here, is the mother of Paul A. Porter, former OPA Administrator and special United States Ambassador to Greece and Palestine, now a partner in the D. C. law firm of Arnold, Fortas and Porter. The article is reprinted with permission from the Lexington Herald.)

'THE TORNADO' is Grandma Porter's favorite

WINCHESTER, Ky., Nov. 18.—New England has its Grandma Moses, but the Blue Grass is holding its own in the expanding field of art for the oldsters since Winchester's Great-Grandma Porter took brush and palette in hand last fall.

Entering the field at the age of 86 armed with a set of materials given her by a nephew going off to college, Mrs. J. J. Porter has completed between 40 and 50 colorful paintings in less than a year.

During that time she has painted in the formal style, delved into impressionism, and plunged into modernism. Strangely enough, her favorite is a modernistic work called "The Tornado," in which an Indian clings to a white horse which is rearing before an ominous storm from which dangles the black funnel of a tornado.

Mrs. W. B. Epperson, sr., a daughter who resides in the same apartment building, says her mother refuses to let relatives put the painting out of sight.

MRS. PORTER took up painting, she says, because her daughter "wouldn't let me do anything" after she moved into the apartment.

When David Fogle, Georgetown, was ready to return to Princeton last year, he brought his aunt an easel, brushes and oil colors and suggested she begin painting. Not being content with idleness after raising a family of eight, she went to work immediately, disregarding her lack of art training.

One of her early works, called "Spring Freshet," was among the first chosen by a Cincinnati artist to be included in last year's exhibit of paintings by Central Kentucky artists. It depicts a swollen stream near her childhood home at Mount Vernon, Ill., into which she once fell while wearing a beautiful new dress. That, she says, accounts for her vivid memory of the scene.

A SECRET until now is the fact that Mrs. Porter had difficulty painting the tree limbs in the background of the picture. When she was unable to depict them as she wished in the usual manner, she turned the painting upside down and drew them that way. Nobody has been able to tell the difference.

Mrs. Porter married after a period of teaching school, and after her husband's death in 1909, she was especially active in church work in Winchester. Her husband was pastor of the First Baptist Church here at the time of his death.

Mrs. Porter organized two Sunday school classes, one of which met outdoors under a big tree and the other in a small railroad building to which each pupil had to carry a lump of coal every Sunday.

The Lexington Herald

KENTUCKY'S GRANDMA PORTER—Not just a grandmother, but six times a great-grandmother, Mrs. J. J. Porter of Winchester, Ky., took up painting last fall at the age of 86 and has completed more than 40 oils in less than a year

SHE ALSO WORKED as society editor of the Winchester Sun. A son, Paul A. Porter, was a member of The Lexington Herald staff while attending the University of Kentucky.

Five other children are living, including John Porter, Louisville; Mrs. D. E. Fogle, Georgetown; Mrs. Frank Bellinger, Carmel, Ind.; Mrs. O. H. Sheldon, Tulsa, Okla., and Mrs. James Howze, Austin, Texas. She has nine grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Sometimes working the entire day, Mrs. Porter has made good use of her time. Prof. Edward W. Rannells, head of the University of Kentucky Art Department, has made two trips to her home to view her work and give advice.

MISS KAY PENDLETON, a professional artist here, also has advised and directed her work. Her influence may have resulted in the modernistic trend, Mrs. Porter says.

Mrs. Epperson says her mother has become quite absorbed in her work. Besides the hours before the easel, she now reads every book about art and artists she can find.

Nearing her 87th birthday, Great-Grandma Porter has found that interesting work is far more enjoyable than doing nothing.

Experiment Blanche

Make-Up Can Give You More Youthful Look

By Ann Lawrence
(Twelfth Day of Blanche's Beauty Program.)

MAKE-UP CAN BE used to enhance natural coloring and loveliness or it can be used to make-over.

The first step in any make-up or make-over is the choice of a good powder foundation.

In Blanche's case, the foundation had to accomplish a dual purpose: It must not only be non-drying, but should contain enough natural oil to protect her skin from wind and sun as well; and it had to be opaque enough to tone down her own too-florid complexion.

To do this yeoman duty, we selected a cream base, light in texture so that it would spread easily (she's an amateur at applying make-up, remember?). One shade darker than her skin tone, but quite muted and with a bit of yellow coloring. This would give her skin a pale, ivory cast, quite becoming with her reddish-blonde hair.

TO APPLY THE BASE, Blanche ripped her middle and index fingers into the jar, scooped up a dot on each and started working from the jawline, up and out all over her face.

Eddie Senz, our movie make-up technician, advised her to spread the foundation over her eyebrows and eyelids as well, then to wipe it off almost completely with a tissue.

Blanche approved the finished product. Already, her skin looked more youthful, as the foundation seemed to blot out many of the little lines and give her complexion a moist, fresher look. Now she could see for herself that while her features are regular and even, her eyes and mouth, minus make-up, faded away and left her face looking vacant.

A variety of activities are occupying members of the Service Set. The season is getting into full swing, with dinners, dances, and countless meetings.

A cocktail party yesterday at the home of Brazil's retiring Air Attache, Maj. Gen. Gervasio Duncan, and Mrs. Duncan drew the international as well as the military. The 6-to-8 party was to say farewell to friends and to introduce Brig. Gen. Luiz Leal Netto dos Reys, new Air Attache of Brazil, and Mrs. Netto dos Reys.

As General Duncan is Dean of the Air Attaches in Washington, guests included most of the air attaches from other countries.

Among the guests were the Ambassador of Brazil, Mauricio Nabuco; the Chief of Staff of the United States Air Force, Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, and Mrs. Vandenberg; Gen. and Mrs. Thomas White; the Air Force Aide to the President, Brig. Gen. Robert B. Landry, USAF, and Mrs. Landry, and the Military Aide to the President, Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, USA, and Mrs. Vaughan were among others in the gathering.

A gay season for Service Set juniors will be ushered in by the Army-Navy-Air Force Cotillion on Friday, November 24, at Fort McNair Officers Club. Dancing will be from 8:30 p. m. to the small hours.

Col. and Mrs. Francis E. Kidwell are chairmen of the Cotillion, which is sponsored by the West Point Class of 1924. Assistants of Col. and Mrs. Kidwell include Col. and Mrs. Thomas G. McCulloch, Mrs. John H. Claybrook, Col. and Mrs. James P. Hulley, and Col. Samuel Fisher.

Brides-Elect Honored at Weekend Pre-Nuptial Fetes

Miss Alwilda Jarden Ferris and Ross de Matteo, who are to be married next Saturday, are having a busy weekend schedule filled with parties in their honor.

A shower for Miss Ferris was given Friday by Mrs. George Lynbrook West, jr., and a cocktail party for the couple was given later in the afternoon by Miss Scottie Mackenzie. At the cocktail party, Lieut. and Mrs. John Byrne, who were married two weeks ago, shared honors with Miss Ferris and her fiance.

Among the guests were Miss Polly Norment, Miss Jane Lingo, Miss Clare Foster, Maj. and Mrs. Hugh Richardson and Capt. Jack Jackson.

Saturday's party list included a luncheon given for Miss Ferris by Mrs. Hugh Forest Richardson, and a cocktail party for Miss Ferris and Ross de Matteo, given by the latter's three roommates, Lieut. Dean Kutchera, USN, Edmund Rowan, and Charles Brock.

Another bride-elect, Miss Agnes Kemp Devereux, whose marriage to Clay Drewry Blair, jr., is to take place next Saturday, was honored at a luncheon yesterday given by Miss Joan Russell.

Half a Bird Is Better Than None—And Even a Leg or Two Looms Mighty Tasty

JUST BECAUSE your family's a duo—or a trio—you needn't foreswear the traditional bird on Thanksgiving Day. Half a gobbler is better than none! So is a quarter, thinks K. M. S.

DEAR ANNE:

I am thinking of buying only part of a turkey this Thanksgiving, since our family is small. Some cooking problems occur to me, though. Will the same timing instructions apply for a quarter or half as for a whole turkey? What shall I do with the dressing? Cooked in a separate pan, it lacks the flavor it has when cooked in the turkey. How long should a frozen piece be thawed before cooking? K. M. S., Arlington, Va.

A turkey half or quarter should be thawed in the refrigerator overnight. (Smaller pieces, such as legs or thighs, take 3 to 9 hours thawing.)

Stuffing can be packed into the open cavity, then covered over with brown paper. This can be held on by lacing over it with clean white wrapping cord and a large needle (such as an upholsterer's needle), catching meat at either side. Or mound stuffing on heavy brown paper and fit turkey over it on rack in pan.

Cook the half or quarter in a shallow, open pan on a rack, using no water. Rub skin with fat before roasting. Baste several times while in oven. Since parts give fewer drippings than a whole turkey, you may have to baste it with melted fat. You needn't turn the half or quarter while roasting since it's not as thick as the whole bird.

A half turkey weighing 7 to 9 pounds will take 4½ to 5 hours at 300 degrees. Roast a quarter 3½ to 4½ hours in a 325-degree oven. The bird is done when joints move easily.

IT'S ALL WHITE MEAT, this turkey quarter, and a fine dish for the small family on Thanksgiving day

DEAR ANNE:

Where is the most appropriate place to keep a lovely sterling silver tray with sugar bowl, creamer, coffee pot, etc.? Could it be kept on the buffet or coffee table?

Mrs. C. M. O., Solomons, Md.

The buffet is the most appropriate place for the silver service. It is correctly placed on the coffee table only when it is in use.

Re: Buckwheat flour, recently discussed in this column, R. J. M. writes to say that old Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park will grind buckwheat in December and throughout the cold weather. This is the last of the flour mills that operated along Rock Creek during the early nineteenth century. The buckwheat flour may be purchased at the mill, along with white and yellow cornmeal and whole wheat flour.

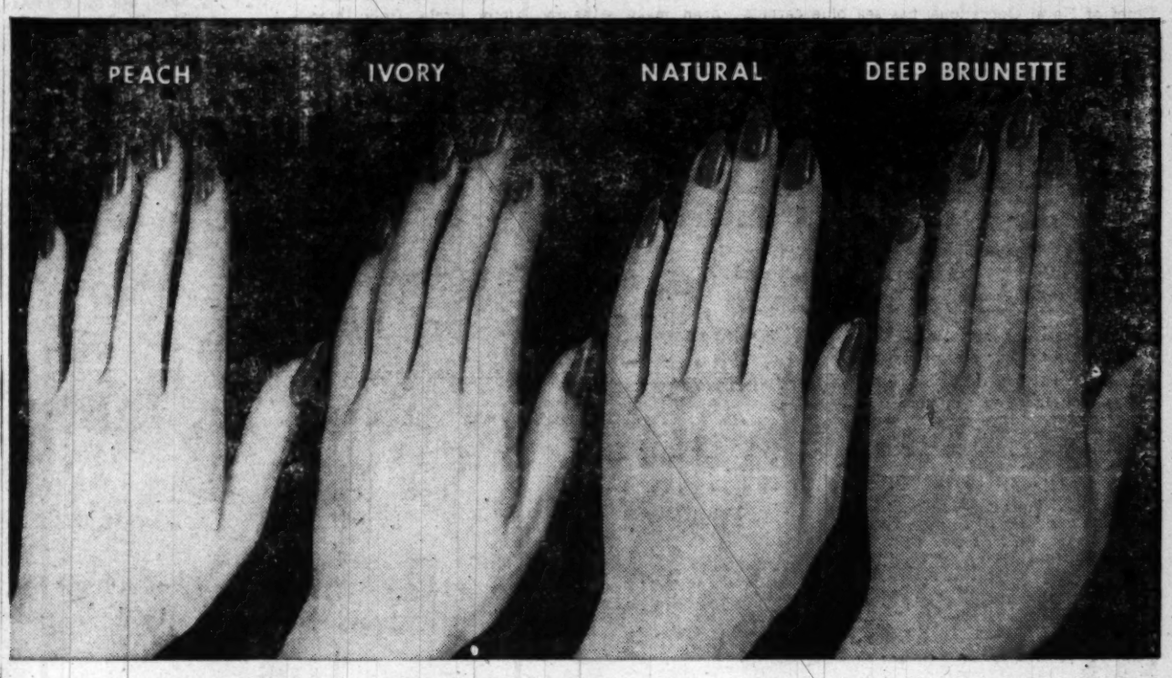
CHOOSE THE SHADE OF HAND BEAUTY YOU WANT



New No-Rub-Off Hand Make-Up
Glorifies Even Red, Rough Knuckles in 10 Seconds

Now comes an utterly different kind of make-up designed especially for your hands! A natural-looking no-rub-off make-up that glorifies even "Hopeless" hands in only 10 seconds!

No more red, unsightly hands or knuckles. No more "work-worn look" or redness.

Immediately—redness, blemishes and brown spots are toned down and blended out. Age-revealing veins and imperfections are concealed to an amazing degree. Your whole hand is instantly glamorized in a way impossible up to now.

This new creation is called Lady Esther HANDS-UP—A delightfully delicate cream that comes in 4 exquisite colors that enable you to choose the exact shade of hand beauty you desire.

Won't Rub Off On Clothes

HANDS-UP is non-sticky, quick-drying—WON'T RUB OFF on clothes or gloves. Stays on until you wash it off! So it is ideal, too, for neck and shoulders.

Miracle Softening-Action

In HANDS-UP I have added a rare, imported ingredient—concentrated lanolin—for speedy skin-softening action. A new form of lanolin that is 2½ times richer than found in hand preparations previously used.

Thus, HANDS-UP not only endows your hands with new beauty instantly—but acts rapidly to soften and smooth your skin every flattering hour you wear it!

Applied in the daytime, HANDS-UP works continuously to offset the coarsening effects of housework and weather. Applied at bedtime, it exerts its gentle skin-smoothing action all night long—to counteract roughness and dryness.

Yes, with my new HANDS-UP, I guarantee you'll never need any other hand preparation of any kind. For HANDS-UP is the first complete and instant hand-beautifier the world has ever known! . . . At all cosmetic counters. Two sizes, 49¢ and 98¢, plus tax.

Prove Its Miracle Softening-Action Tonight

Tonight, before you go to bed, smooth my new HANDS-UP on your right hand only. Note the instant transformation. See how redness disappears, even from knuckles. See how freckles and blemishes are toned down and blended out.

In the morning, compare the difference in the way your two hands FEEL. Notice how much softer and smoother the right hand has become just overnight.

This is positive proof of the DOUBLE beautifying action of my new HANDS-UP:—(1) Instant new hand-loveliness the moment you apply it. (2) Continuous skin protection and softening every hour you wear it!

4 Flattering Shades

- PEACH—delicate finish for the lightest-toned skin.
- IVORY—ivory-like beauty for light to medium toned skin.
- NATURAL—a flawless look for all medium skin tones.
- DEEP BRUNETTE—sun-tawny finish for olive skin tones.

TRY IT FREE—at leading stores

Because my HANDS-UP is so new it is hard to believe how much beauty it adds even to the loveliest hands. So I invite you to try it free—at any leading drug or department store. Stores have a special supply for this purpose. So simply ask for a free demonstration of HANDS-UP today!

Her Birthday Present Was A Bay Colt

By Elizabeth Maguire

WITH A BIRTHDAY CAKE and a bay colt, Mrs. Forrest P. Sherman's anniversary got off to a happy start last Thursday. The cake, bedecked with a rose arbor and blue birds, emerged from the kitchen about mid-morning, and the colt arrived by van in Middleburg about noon.

After going through a sea of birthday messages, Mrs. Sherman left in her riding clothes for Middleburg to receive the van. With greatest enthusiasm she told how she planned to keep the colt as a show ring hunter. "He was bred to race," she said, "but he is not going to. He's going to have a better life than that."

"Have you named him?" we asked.

"I'm afraid I didn't have that privilege, as he was already registered. And what do you think they named him? Three Sheets!"

SINCE SHE CAN REMEMBER, Mrs. Sherman has enjoyed riding, and her husband, the Chief of Naval Operations, enjoys riding with her when he can find time from work. "He and General Marshall used to be early-morning riders at Fort Myer," Mrs. Sherman recalls, "but that was before the war."

Mrs. Sherman is petite, very young-looking, and has lots of sparkle. Before her marriage she was Dolores Brownson of Pensacola, Fla. She met Forrest Sherman when he was a student aviator in Pensacola.

Like all Navy wives, she has had her share of following the fleet. When her husband was commander of the Sixth Task Fleet in the Mediterranean, she lived in Madrid, Nice, Italy, Turkey, et al. "Wherever the fleet was, there was I," she said.

SINCE NOVEMBER, 1949, when Admiral Sherman became Chief of Naval Operations, she has lived at Admiral's House, on a hilltop in town. Presently making their home with the Admiral and his wife are their son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. John Fitzpatrick, USN, and their two children, Diane, age 3, and John Sherman, age 1.

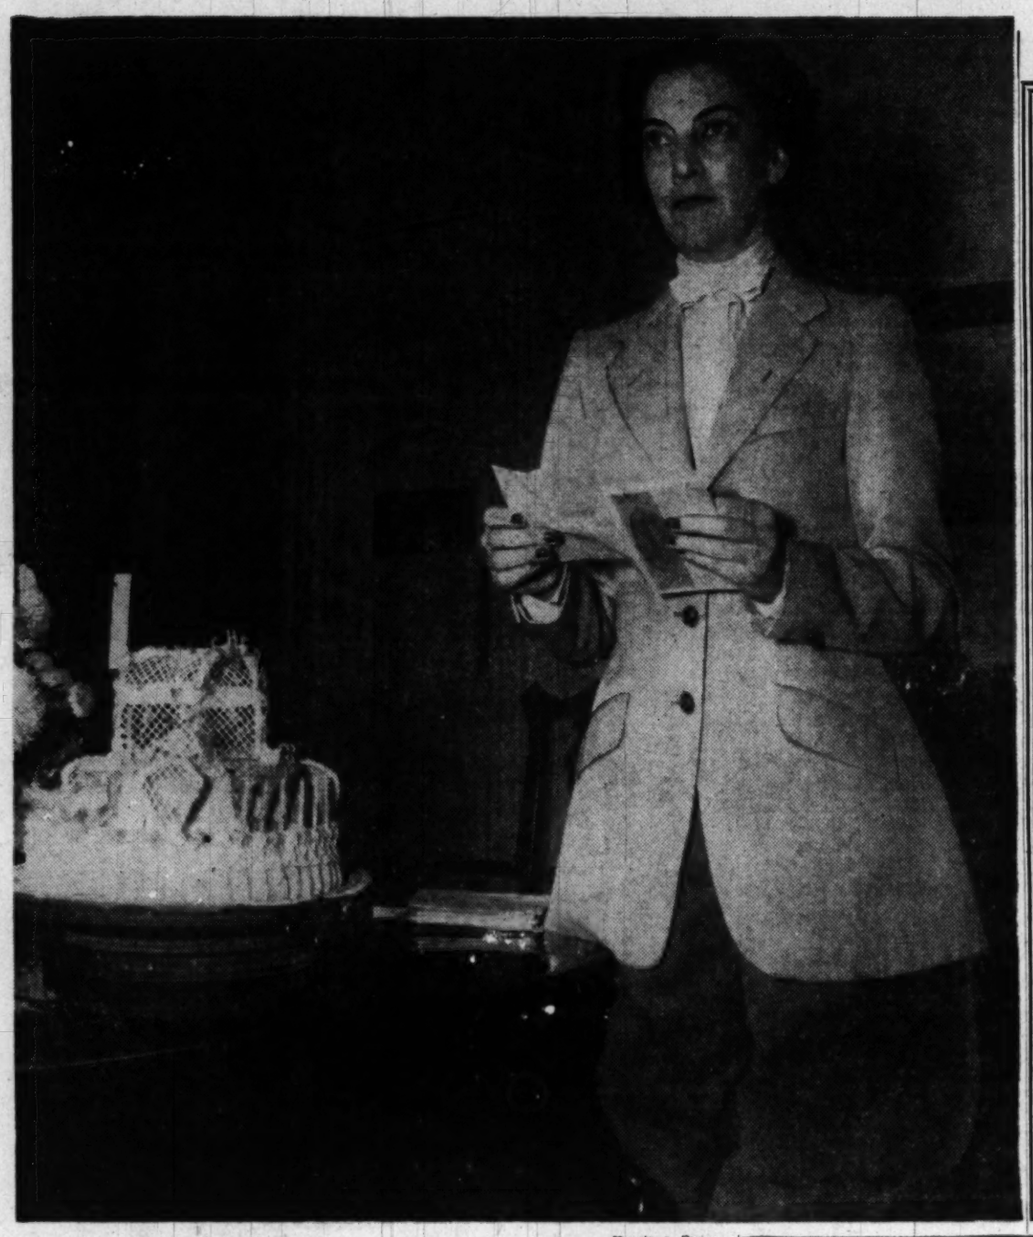
Little Diane speaks only Spanish, learned at the United States Embassy in Madrid, when her father was Naval Attache. And she looks like a perfect little Goya, with pink cheeks, rich brown hair, and blue eyes round with polite wonder.

On frequent occasions when her grandparents entertain at dinner, she posts herself at the head of the third floor staircase, and waits for her grandmother to take her down to be introduced around. After a curtsey and "buenos noches" to each guest, she is ready for bed. Once her grandmother forgot to come, and the little sentinal gave up her third-floor watch only under extreme protest.

ADMIRAL'S HOUSE, traditional home of the Chief of Naval Operations, has sea blue carpets and draperies, soft gray walls and gold chairs. Mesotints loaned by the Academy at Annapolis line the walls, alongside portraits of famous admirals. A recent acquisition is a beautiful laquer box presented last week to Admiral Sherman by the Korean Navy.

Everything in the house is ship-shape, immaculately neat. The children have their pets, of the stuffed variety, on the third floor reservation. "I am a real fussy housekeeper," said Mrs. Sherman. "The Admiral and I never could stand things out of place. We enjoy our home so much, but only when everything is on the mark."

Entertaining at Admiral's House is frequent and on a small scale. There have been no great big pushes, Mrs. Sherman says, but numerous dinners. The Shermans and their children and grandchildren make a happy family circle. Only thing lacking in their lives is more time for each other.



Harris & Ewing

ON HER BIRTHDAY last Thursday Mrs. Forrest Sherman, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, was presented with a cake trimmed with rose arbor and blue birds. After going through numerous birthday greetings, Mrs. Sherman left for Middleburg, Va., to receive another gift, a bay colt, vanned down from New York

Everything's Right Up to Snuff At the Tom Connally's House

By Elizabeth Carpenter

Harris & Ewing

MRS. TOM CONNALLY

AT SENATOR AND MRS. TOM CONNALLY'S house, internationalism has gone about as far as it can go.

Visitors can dip snuff in 25 different languages. That is, they can if they bring their own snuff.

Mrs. Connally's snuff box collection, gathered from many parts of the world, was started years ago. Her trips abroad with Senator Connally to attend many international parleys have given her new opportunities to add to the collection.

The snuff boxes, most of them extremely small and colorful, are kept on a coffee table beside the fireplace in her living room. All are empty and neatly polished. Varied in shape and character, one is a mother-of-pearl box purchased in the Old Curiosity Shoppe in London, another is a colorful French enamel box bought in Paris. There are some Italian and Spanish boxes, but Mrs. Connally's favorite is a tortoise-shell box, complete with a small silver spoon, which she picked up right here in Washington.

IN THEIR TWO-STORY WHITE BRICK home, just behind the Shoreham Hotel, the senior Senator from Texas and his wife spend their evenings watching television, playing bridge (he refuses to play "Canasta"), or just talking with a few old friends after dinner.

To help the Senator relax from a day of cosmic problems, Mrs. Connally picks up an interesting story each day for dinner table consumption.

"Sometimes we discuss what is going on up on Capitol Hill," Mrs. Connally says, "but I never dwell on it. I try to divert his thoughts a little."

In her forty years in Washington, Mrs. Connally has had a front-row seat on this nation's preparations for both World Wars, for peace, and now again for whatever the Korean situation brings.

COMING TO WASHINGTON AS A SCHOOLGIRL at Belcourt Seminary in 1904, Lucile Sanderson of Texarkana met her congressman, young Rep. Morris Sheppard, a bachelor, who enjoyed escorting his "constituent" around. In 1909, after she had attended Randolph-Macon Women's College in Virginia, the congressman married his "constituent" and they raised a family of three girls. One of the daughters lives in Washington, Mrs. Arthur Keyes jr.

When Rep. Sheppard was elected to the Senate and then advanced to become chairman of the important Senate Military Affairs Committee, his wife had a close view of this Nation's efforts to prepare for two world wars. Senator Sheppard died in 1941.

The following year, Mrs. Sheppard married Senator Tom Connally, a widower. He was at that time chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. She has accompanied him on most of his trips abroad to the Foreign Ministers Conferences and other peace-making parleys where she has met the great "peace-makers" of this era.

AN UNDERSTANDING OF NATIONAL and international problems by every housewife is necessary if we are to have a peaceful and happy nation, Mrs. Connally believes.

"I regret that the processes of daily living and of making a living take up so much time that the average citizen does not study current events sufficiently," she said.

In making these observations, Mrs. Connally is preaching something she does practice.

Although she has never lent her name to "cause groups," Mrs. Connally is well-read and well-informed on what is going on. She knows who is testifying on Capitol Hill or making important speeches in the Senate.

RECENTLY, MRS. CONNALLY HAS HAD an opportunity to take up piano playing again. This and sorting out family papers and documents take up all the time when she is not engaged in official duties.

She is trying to get her thirteen diaries in shape for her eight grandchildren. The diaries, which span a period of nearly 40 years, are a mixture of official and home life in Washington. She tells of a weekend aboard President Coolidge's yacht, where, she thought, "Silent Cal talked quite a lot." Then, she writes of returning home "to have the girls' hair bobbed."

Despite the fact that she has spent forty years in top-level Washington, Mrs. Connally has never taken a cocktail or an alcoholic beverage of any kind. She doesn't make a point of it. She generally just handles the situation with calm dignity as she did when a photographer was posing her for a picture recently.

"Think of something pleasant," he told her, "Think of a Scotch and soda."

"I'll think of my grandchildren," she replied.

Stag Lines

By Bert Bacharach

FASHION: Many well-dressed men, such as Tyrone Power, like handkerchiefs which match or blend with their ties. It adds a smart touch to casual wear.

HANDYMAN: Loose tire chains can be tightened by using those long screen-door springs fastened to the chains spokewise across the diameter of the wheel . . . Put a towel bar on the inside wall of the closet where brooms, mops, ironing board, etc., are kept. Slip handles under the bar—and you'll never have a Fibber McGee routine when the door is opened.

CARE OF CLOTHES: Make it a practice, weekly, to go over the collar-fold of your coats with a little cleaning fluid. This removes dust and dirt which soil your shirt collars.

GADGETS: The newest infra-red home broiler has a grill on top that can be used simultaneously. It's a whole kitchen-in-one! $32.50 . . . Crystal block military brushes are now designed for the sportsman—with either dog's head or fish decorating the handle. Brush and comb, $2.50 . . . Car lighter, to replace your present one, that pops out a lighted cigarette, $2.95.

WATCH YOUR COLLAR: The smart appearance of a well-fitting shirt can be spoiled if your collar pin pulls the points out of shape or wrinkles collar. Solution: Try a longer pin.

DRINK TIPS: In drink recipes, a jigger means 1½ ounces; a pony, 1 ounce; and a dash means 1-3 teaspoon . . . Mix sugar and fruit juices before adding other ingredients . . . Here's how to make a "Salty Dog": Shake 2 ounces gin, juice of half lemon or whole lime and ¼ teaspoon table salt. Pour into 10-ounce glass with ice—and fill with charged water. You'll find its taste clean and bracing.

KITTY KALLEN, lovely songstress, says: "If men knew how wonderful they look in dinner clothes, they'd wear them much more often. It's a nice compliment, too, to their dressed-up dates."

ODD ITEM: Clifton Webb will play an angel in his new picture, "For Heaven's Sake"—and he'll be the best-dressed angel ever seen on the screen.

Antiques Go Modern

A deceptive house, this. Modern as can be, it's larger than it looks and livable from one end to the other. That's Phyllis Bell model Ann Chester—just wishing . . .

The home is furnished with Early American pieces, most of them at least 100 years old. Modern house, antique furniture are a pleasing combination of the new and the old

Believe it or not, it's the same house, viewed from the rear. The large glassed-in area on the first level can become a third bedroom, or a recreation room, den, or whatever

By Robert P. Jordan

COUPLE of young home builders named Paul I. Burman and Paul Hammond got to wondering some time back how one of their new, contemporary-style houses would be for looks and livability if it were furnished with antiques.

It's a good question. Seems that nearly everyone who buys a modern-design home thinks that probably it should be furnished with modern-style furniture. To look its best, that is: to be livable in the mode of today.

Then, when it's necessary to make do with the old, traditional furniture, the buyer may proudly describe the appearance of his new house from the outside—and, somewhat ruefully, add, "Of course, we still have our old furniture."

Well, this didn't seem right to Burman and Hammond. They were of the opinion that a contemporary-style house could be successfully furnished with modern, modern and traditional, traditional, or even antiques. They set out to prove it.

You can see the result today. Hammond Homes, Inc., is opening the model house of its 58-unit subdivision at the corner of Pendleton dr. and Viers Mill rd., Wheaton, Md. The home, modern as today, is beautifully furnished in antique pieces that, in some instances, date back to the American Revolution.

"Most people don't think it will work at all," says Miss Elizabeth Webb, owner of the Early American Shop at 1323 Wisconsin ave. nw. Miss Webb has lent the furniture that is in the house and placed it where it belongs.

IN FRONT of the fireplace, to start with, she put a small—as the genuine ones go—cobbler's bench. It would look good in front of any fireplace, but it's unusually appropriate before this one.

The fireplace, you see, is built of old, time-mellowed bricks. Its wide front presents a subdued color pattern that blends with the old furniture in the room. It's soft lines make for easy relaxation.

So it's a pleasure to sit before the fireplace. Likewise before the wide, floor-to-ceiling window in the living room. Architects these days are pointing for "indoor-outdoor" living in contemporary-style homes, and this is an excellent example. Makes the living room seem big as all outdoors.

Perhaps that's the big reason why the Windsor bench in front of the window-wall really belongs there. It has a rustic hint to it. And it's something like 130 years old and sturdy as the day it was made.

Miss Webb makes this point about antique furniture: It may be 100 or so years old, and generally it's good for another 100. "Really good early American stuff is first-rate, seasoned wood," she adds.

Largest piece in the living room is the secretary. It was made in Pennsylvania, Miss Webb says, around 1830. One of the smaller pieces is an old lid-lift commode.

Here's the '51 Real Estate Outlook

THE DISTRICT chapter of the Society of Residential Appraisers sponsored a panel discussion last week on the real estate outlook for 1951 here and over the country.

Members of the panel—realtor, builder, mortgage banker, appraiser Federal housing official—agreed on this:

Next year, in Greater Washington, ought to be a good one from the real estate standpoint.

George DeFranceaux, mortgage banker and vice president of Frederick W. Berens, Inc. told some 100 members of the chapter that "1951 looks like a darn good year to me." To which William M. Throckmorton, realtor and appraiser, added:

"Conditions in Washington are different from the rest of the country. Business is always good here."

Curt C. Mack, assistant commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, said that Government mortgage credit controls imposed last month will have varying results in different sections of the country.

IN THE SOUTH, he said, there may be "no appreciable effect," because homes can be constructed more cheaply there. In some northern cities, however, home building may be curtailed, because houses generally cost $10,000 and up to construct them.

Large-scale builder William Banks, of Banks & Lee, reported that the new regulations have brought about a change in lending schedules for home buyers. This, in turn, has produced "a different type" of buyer.

Prior to the credit curbs, a home buyer would be required to pay "X dollars per $1000" monthly to reduce the mortgage. Banks said. Now he must pay "X plus $10," according to the builder.

As a result, buyers that can pay the X dollars plus $10 want more value for their money than the purchaser of pre-regulation days.

Appraiser-realtor William Mollan said that a sufficient supply of building materials should be on hand soon to bring down construction costs. He pointed out that lumber prices have dropped recently.

FHA Commissioner Mack forecast, too, an increased supply of materials, excepting metals, but said that increased labor costs may absorb "possible lower costs in building materials." Banks declared that there is a shortage of millwork in this area and said he

75 Years on One Farm

DES MOINES, (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. Dick (Henry J.) Fullerton celebrated a diamond anniversary with open house on their Hollyhock farm near Rockford, Iowa. The occasion was the observance of 75 years' residence on the farm by Fullerton.

Fullerton's parents moved to Iowa from Canada in 1871. They purchased the present farm in 1875 when Fullerton was 3 years old. The first home on the place was a one-story, 14-by-22-foot house.

Tree Crops Supply Today's Lumber

During the past generation, the forest economy of the Nation has been emerging gradually from one supplied by virgin forests to one of reliance upon growing timber as a crop.

Mortgage Rates Listed

WHEN you've decided to buy the house and you're figuring out how much it's going to cost every month to pay off the mortgage, it can be a confusing business.

The Housing and Home Finance Agency is well aware of this. Ever since the Government imposed stringent mortgage credit controls on October 12, prospective home buyers have been calling HHFA to inquire about mortgage payments.

As a result, the agency has prepared the following table. It shows the monthly home mortgage payments for each $1000 of the loan amount, according to the interest rate and loan term.

In the table below, the 4 percent schedule should be used to compute monthly payments on home loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration. The 4¼, 4½, 4¾ and 5 percent rates in the table apply to loans made conventionally—other than with Federal insurance.

For loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration, which bear interest at not more than 4¼ percent, it is necessary to add ½ of 1 percent on the declining balance of the payment to cover the mortgage insurance premium. A table outlining this type of payment is at the bottom of this story.

(All schedules exclude any payments required to cover hazard insurance premiums, taxes and assessments which would vary according to the property and its location. Such payments are mandatory for FHA-insured mortgages and VA-guaranteed home loans. They are required by many lenders making conventional, (uninsured and non-guaranteed loans.)

Interest Rate	Loan Term	Monthly Payment
5%	30 yrs.	$ 5.37
5%	25 yrs.	5.85
5%	20 yrs.	6.60
5%	15 yrs.	7.91
5%	10 yrs.	10.61

4%	25 yrs.	5.28
4%	20 yrs.	6.06
4%	15 yrs.	7.40
4%	10 yrs.	10.13

The following table is a schedule of FHA-insured monthly loan payments. To cover the mortgage insurance premium, ½ of 1 percent of the declining balance of the loan is added to the 4¼ percent interest rate.

In this illustration, the first year's monthly payment rate is used and mortgage insurance premiums are calculated as 1/12th of the second year's premium, the first year's premium, together with 1/12th the second year's premium, being paid in full at the time the loan is made.) For subsequent years, the insurance premium amount declines gradually as the principal is amortized.

Interest Rate	Loan Term	Monthly Payment
4¼%	25 yrs.	$ 5.82
4¼%	20 yrs.	6.60
4¼%	15 yrs.	7.92

U. S. Home Building Declines

FOR the first time this year, the number of housing units started in the United States in October fell below the 1949 building pace.

It wasn't much of a decline. On the basis of preliminary estimates, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday that 103,000 homes and apartments were put under construction last month—just 1300 fewer than were begun in October, 1949, when building activity was at its peak for that year.

The 103,000 units were a drop of 10 percent from September's construction volume. Effect of mortgage credit controls on housing starts cannot be determined at this time, the bureau said.

A total of 1,209,100 new dwelling units was started in the first 10 months of this year—42 percent more than the 851,300 begun in the same period of 1949. Public housing accounted for 23,000 units of the January-October volume, 30 percent under the corresponding total for last year.

Final estimates for the first seven months of 1950 show some increases over last year in the proportion of housing built in urban places, and a decline in the proportion of rental-type housing put under construction.

Of the total number of dwelling units begun during the first seven months of the year, 59 percent were started in urban areas during 1950, compared with 56 percent in 1949.

Rental housing (units in 2-or-more family structures) comprised 17 percent of all new dwelling units started during January-July, 1950. Last year, for the same months, the proportion was 23 percent.

Rent Controls to Continue In 600-Odd Communities

MORE THAN 600 communities have acted to continue Federal rent control after December 31, reports Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

The 600 communities have a total population of 20 million. They have an estimated 3 million rental units, based on 1940 census figures and estimates.

Of the total, 317 communities passed governing body resolutions for extension of rent control and sent notification of their action to Woods for entry in the Federal Register.

More than 300 others acted by popular referendum November 7. Woods said a preliminary count indicated that rent control extension was favored by voters in 313 communities and disapproved in 38.

The Housing and Rent Act of 1950 provides for automatic expiration of rent control at the close of December 31 except where incorporated communities declare that a shortage of rental housing still exists requiring the continuance of rent control.

Maple Trees Flourish

The present stands of hard maple trees in northern forests should last another 50 years or more. After that, according to timber engineers, the second growth trees will have matured sufficiently to provide maple lumber for many years to come.

Prefab Business Is Booming

DESPITE the fact that most wartime promises for prefabricated houses turned out to be pie in the sky, thousands of prefabs are going up now over the Nation.

More than 80 firms are making prefabs today. They have put up almost 50,000 prefabricated houses this year. That's 5 percent of all new single-family home construction in the country, according to an article in the December issue of Pageant magazine titled, "Whatever Happened to the Prefabricated House?"

Today's prefabs are conventional rather than revolutionary—the result of old-fashioned building codes, resistance from builders and workmen, and banks' ideas of public taste.

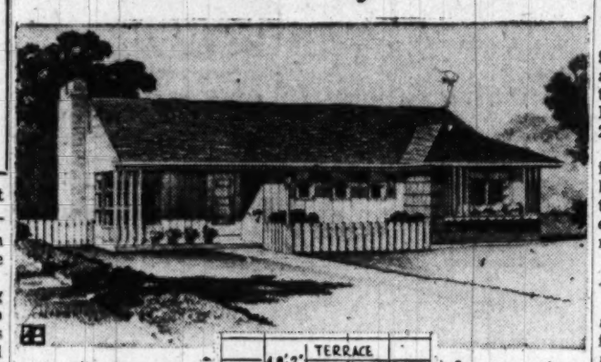
But they deliver on the practical promises of prefabrication, the article says—services of architects and engineers too expensive for the small builder, guaranteed precision workmanship, predictable expense, and completion in one-third the average time.

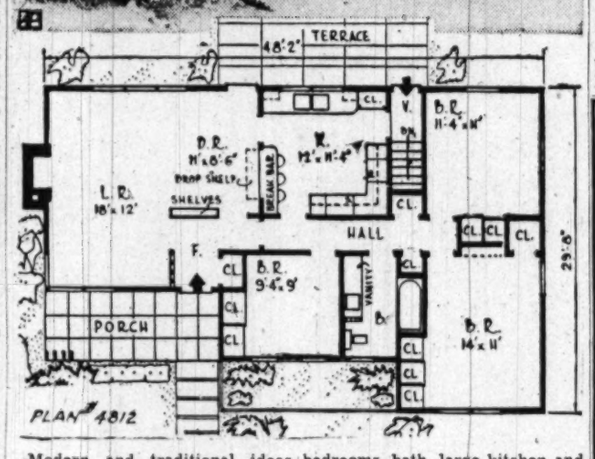
Prefabs range all the way from $400 garages to big-money supermarkets, office buildings and apartments, but in the past year the emphasis has been on the low-cost house from $5000 to $9000. This is one of the two factors credited with the 1950 boom in prefabrication.

The other factor in prefab popularity, according to the article, is the increasing tendency of builders and contractors to use prefabs in their subdivisions.

However, there's a discouraging aspect to prefabrication today. It's that a house "shell" which can be fabricated in 30 minutes and put up in four hours takes a month to get ready for occupancy.

House With Homey Touches...





Modern and traditional ideas are blended in this design, which combines large picture windows with flower boxes, dooryard garden and homey shutters.

Although the house has three bedrooms, bath, large kitchen and front-to-rear living room, it covers only 1164 square feet, exclusive of porch.

This is Plan 4812 by L. A. Rauscher, 144 Himrod st., Brooklyn 21, N. Y.

28 Northwest D. C. Houses Scheduled

The houses are to be two stories in height, with basements, and of brick and cinderblock construction. They will be 16 by 32 feet each. Architect is George T. Santmyers, 2209 L st. nw.

Apartments Planned

P. D. Ford & Son, 16 Carroll ave., Takoma Park, have applied for a permit to construct two apartment houses containing a total of nine units at 8316-18 Roanoke ave., Takoma Park.

Ethiopia Plans Road Repairs

ADDIS ABABA (AP).—Emperor Haile Selassie plans a major repair program for Ethiopia's highways. Mussolini built more than 2000 miles of surfaced roads in Ethiopia, at an estimated cost of 300 million dollars.

Some of the highways cost as much as $40,000 a mile, because of extremely difficult terrain. More than 60,000 Italian laborers at one time were engaged in the great road program.

History Is Made

Enterprising Realty Company Makes the Most of Television

MAN who heads the Allen Realty Co. in Falls Church had an idea a few weeks back. Best idea he's had in a long time, he says.

Why not advertise homes for sale—new and old—on television, he asked himself. This transient question came to him as he was pondering the future of the real estate business under a defense economy, he recalls.

So he hired a photographer, had him make exterior and interior shots of a house he was listing for sale. Then, last Monday morning, he had the pictures shown over TV Station WTTG, thus making some kind of real estate advertising history.

Along with the pictures went a running voice commentary on the house's features. This he did the remainder of the week, once a day, a minute or so at a time. Different house each day.

Results? "Wonderful!" Now he's planning to advertise houses on TV on Saturdays as well as weekdays, is hoping to line up some evening "spots," would love a Sunday broadcast. His newspaper ads tell readers that if they'd like to have their house sold by television, just call Allen Realty.

They're calling, he says. Phones ring right up to 11 o'clock every night, he reports.

10 Houses Slated

Plans are expected to be ready in a week for construction of 10 houses in Monticello Park, Alexandria. Owner-builder is J. Garrett Beitzell, 1515 K st. nw. Subbids will be taken shortly.

Building Costs Next Year Forecast at Current Level

PERSONS planning to build homes next year will find costs at least as high as at present, predicts Miles Colean, building consultant to House Beautiful magazine.

Writing in the November issue, Colean also forecasts an increased availability of building materials. Unless military preparation is greater than "anything now in view," 1951 should be a good building year, he adds.

"Actual absorption of materials used in building supplies and equipment by the Government," Colean explains, "will not be so greatly in excess of what it was in 1950 as to call for any rigorous curtailment of civilian building."

He cites two reasons for the scarcity of materials during this summer and fall an unprecedented volume of construction which created demands much larger than the supply industries had planned for, and a step-up of buying, either to protect outstanding commitments or simply to speculate on the crisis as a result of the sudden involvement in Korea.

Antiques 'Belong' in a Modern Home

It's a natural for installing a radio, phonograph or even a bar in it.

As in most modern-style homes, the dining room has become the dining area, and it's virtually a part of the living room. The dining area, at its far end, also seems to merge into the kitchen. A large chair-table and chairs (circa 1830) have been placed here against the antiqued wall of a large storage closet. Overhead, (modern touch) a spotlight throws its beam on the table.

THE EARLY AMERICAN theme is seen at its best in the bedrooms, and it's perfectly at home with the large picture windows in them. Take a look at the back bedroom:

The cannonball post bed is around 130 years old. That's old enough for it to use ropes for the springs. The big chest of drawers was made in northern New York "no later than the American Revolution," according to Miss Webb. The redecorated chairs are about 120 years old.

And so on. The idea is that here is a contemporary-style house that is completely furnished with age-mellowed furniture. It's a fine combination.

Builders Burman and Hammond have carried out in fine fashion, too, the specifications of Charles M. Goodman, the architect. Each house in the subdivision, for instance, has been placed just-so on its site.

That's because the homes are designed to catch the sun's rays when their warmth would be welcome—as in winter—and to turn them away when they're not wanted — as in summer. This is done by the wide overhang of the eaves.

The fireplace is more than merely decorative. It is designed to circulate heat. On a sunny day when the temperature is 50 or so outside, the sun's warmth and the fire in the fireplace are sufficient to heat the houses up to 65 degrees.

ARCHITECT GOODMAN has specified that the heat registers be placed at the perimeter of the home—the point where heat loss is the greatest. Thus, furnace heat is sent from the outer edges of rooms to the inside.

To take advantage of the rolling terrain, Goodman has designed both one and two-level houses. The model home is a two-level structure. The ground level room has walls of glass on two sides. It can be made into a bedroom, recreation room, den or workroom, and has laundry and bath facilities.

The model home will be open from 10 a. m. to dark today. Houses range in price from the two-bedroom, one-level home at $11,950 to the three-bedroom, two-level house at $16,900. Financing is either with a Veterans' Administration loan guarantee, or conventional. Ten percent down payment is asked.

The modern window treatment in this bedroom affords a fine view of woods in back of the house. The little table in front of the window "belongs" even though it was made 120 years ago to serve as a dough box for mixing bread. The old bed has rope springs

Sub-Bids Taken For 9 Dwellings

Sub-bids are being taken for nine one-story and basement houses to be built on King Street rd., Alexandria,, by John and Joe Juliano, 1420 Mount Vernon blvd., Alexandria. The brick and cinder-block houses will be 36 by 27 feet each.

Concrete Slab Floors Tested For Performance

METHODS for testing the design and construction of concrete slab flooring are being studied by the Southwest Research Institute, San Antonio, Tex., under sponsorship of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The study, which also seeks to determine adequate performance standards for slabs placed on ground that is subject to movement, includes:

A survey of existing information regarding slab floors laid on grade; a survey of such floors in the San Antonio area; and construction and testing of slab floors of various designs.

doubted that materials prices would decline appreciably.

MEMBERS of the panel made these other comments:

The credit controls will accentuate conventional financing of houses—Mack. The FHA official said this could become inflationary.

Fear of atomic bomb attack has had "no particular effect" on the real estate market here—Mollan.

Builders have not been shut out of construction loans because of the controls.—DeFranceaux. Construction money is as available to the small builder as to the large one, he said.

The home sales situation here has altered as a result of the restrictions. "The honeymoon is over. Now it's necessary to get down to a sensible selling and offer houses at their real value. There's no shortage of money anywhere down the line—but too many sellers are holding out for high prices."—Throckmorton.

The panel discussion highlighted the society's monthly meeting. Panel members were queried by Washington newspapermen. The session was moderated by Allan B. Elliott, president of the organization.

Runs Hot and Cold

A new development in the plumbing industry is a revolutionary single-handle mixing faucet. The single handle operates in an up-down motion for on and off, with the "up" position for "on." As the handle is turned to the left, the water from the faucet gets hotter. As the handle is turned to the right, the water becomes colder.

GUNNISON HOMES, INC., last week announced a new prefabricated home model to sell in the $7000 to $10,000 price range.

Known as the Coronado, it is a new departure for the company, which has confined production to relatively conventional designs.

Gen. John J. O'Brien, president, described the new model as contemporary, ranch-type styling, featuring low-pitched roofs with wide, overhanging eaves, sweeping horizontal lines and large picture windows.

It will be available in January, 1951, in five sizes containing two and three bedrooms, he said.

The new model is designed to meet the demand for a ranch-type dwelling in the low-cost home field and will sell in the $7000-$10,000 price range, according to O'Brien.

The Coronado line will have a variety of exterior architectural treatments; streamlined steel kitchen cabinets with double-compartment sink; modern bath facilities, and large rooms with ample closets.

The Coronado supplements the Deluxe series and low-cost Champion models. O'Brien said the company currently is prefabricating and shipping 43 homes per day.

Dodge Officials Forecast Relaxation Of Mortgage Credit Restrictions in 1951

BUILDING and engineering contracts will decline 19 percent in 1951 in the 37 states east of the Rockies.

This is estimated in the annual November outlook of F. W. Dodge Corporation, construction news and marketing specialists, as published in Architectural Record.

The estimates are authored by Thomas S. Holden, president of F. W. Dodge, and Clyde Shute, assistant vice president in charge of the statistical and research division.

"This is a cut-back from the peak construction volume of all time," they say. "It leaves a dollar total measurably greater than that of any year except 1950, and a physical volume total that would compare favorably with other prosperous construction years.

"We question whether there will be much change in the level of construction costs in 1951. Some materials will be tight; others which were tight in 1950 will be plentiful and competitively priced.

Government action in "turning the inflation spigot on and off" is analyzed by Holden and Shute. They base a relatively optimistic viewpoint on the expectation that recent mortgage credit curbs will prove to be too drastic and will be modified during 1951.

"Government officials announce the intention of cutting 1951 housing production back one-third from the total 1950 volume; from approximately 1,300,000 back to 850,000 new nonfarm dwelling units," the writers say. "We incline to the opinion that Regulation X is quite severe and that its effect, unless modified, would be to reduce housing volume considerably more than one third.

"In our estimates we have assumed that Regulation X will be moderated some time next year, if such action proves necessary to produce in 1951 approximately two-thirds of the 1950 housing volume. It is our view that 800,000 to 850,000 new nonfarm units would adequately meet 1951 housing requirements.

"Single-family houses built on owners' order for owners' occupancy are likely to decline less, percentage-wise, than houses built for sale by operative builders."

The article points out that the Government's steps to "reinvigorate the waning postwar housing boom in mid-1949," plus further credit easing in the spring of 1950 and a free-spending mood of the public, combined to bring about a 1950 housing boom that surpassed all records and expectations.

The Dodge estimate is that combined residential and nonresidential contract valuations in the 37 states in 1951 will decline 24 percent relative to 1949.

However, public and private works and utilities, also known as heavy engineering, will remain at the same dollar total, to bring the total of all construction down 19 percent. The estimate is that nonresidential building will decline 10 percent, and residential 35 percent.

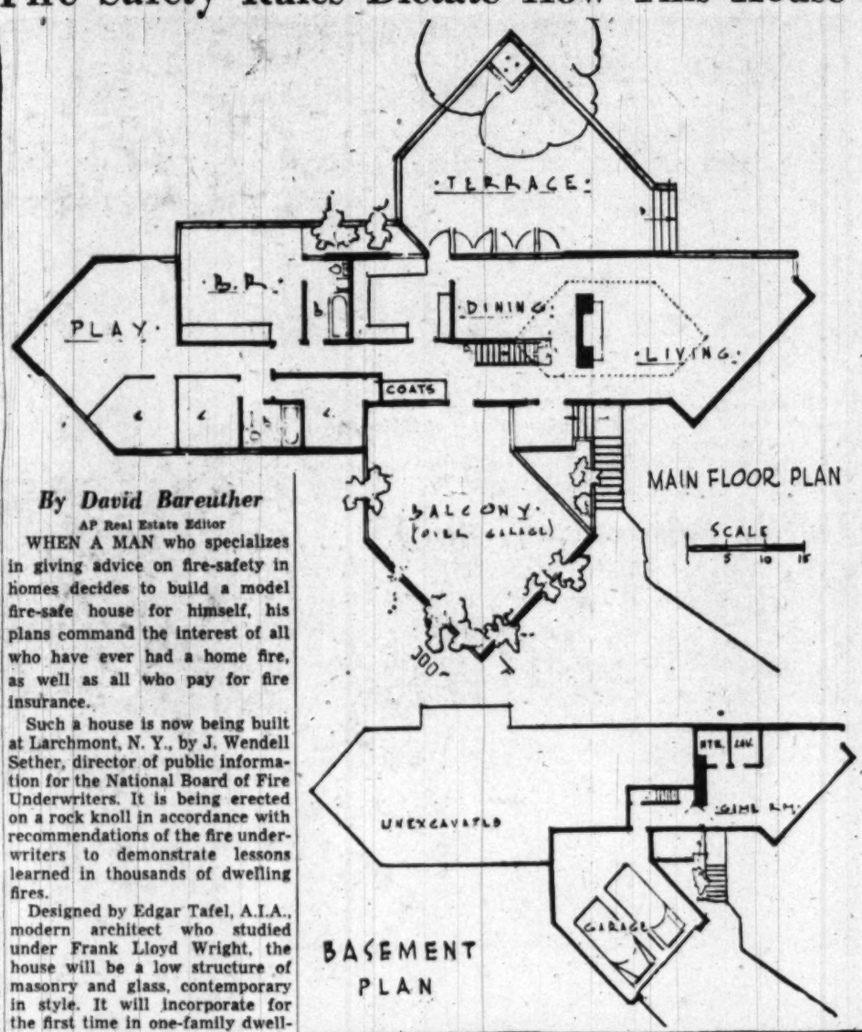
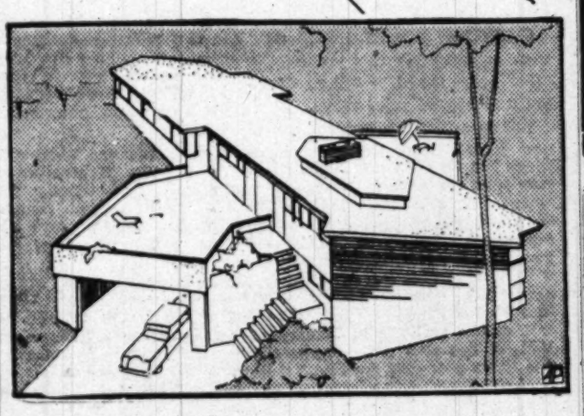
Fire Safety Rules Dictate How This House Is to Be Built





By David Bareuther
AP Real Estate Editor

WHEN A MAN who specializes in giving advice on fire-safety in homes decides to build a model fire-safe house for himself, his plans command the interest of all who have ever had a home fire, as well as all who pay for fire insurance.

Such a house is now being built at Larchmont, N. Y., by J. Wendell Sether, director of public information for the National Board of Fire Underwriters. It is being erected on a rock knoll in accordance with recommendations of the fire underwriters to demonstrate lessons learned in thousands of dwelling fires.

Designed by Edgar Tafel, A.I.A., modern architect who studied under Frank Lloyd Wright, the house will be a low structure of masonry and glass, contemporary in style. It will incorporate for the first time in one-family dwelling construction all practicable fire-safety rules of the fire underwriters' engineers.

ATOM-BOMB safety features are being included, although this will not be a fireproof house in the sense of a massive incombustible structure. However, the architect points out that it will have a great deal more fire-resistance than the average dwelling. Every precaution is being taken to make sure that nothing in the house can cause a fire.

Flooring will consist of precast concrete slabs supported by precast concrete joists. There will be no need for fire-stops in exterior walls, which will be of masonry, and interior partitions will rest on concrete.

Living and sleeping quarters will be on one floor and they will be separated by a fire-resistant partition, pierced only by a hallway equipped with a self-closing fire-door. A fusible link will close this door automatically in case of fire.

Doors and windows opening directly to the grade level will eliminate all need for fire-escapes and make it impossible for anyone to be trapped in the house.

An automatic fire-alarm system will have thermostats located in key spots, such as the heater room, garage, kitchen and living room. The alarm will sound both inside and outside the house. In the event the occupants are away from home when the alarm sounds, neighbors will hear it.

WHERE WOOD is necessary in finishing the interior, it will be protected by approved fire-resistant paints. Fabrics in drapes and upholstery will be flame-proofed according to specifications of the fire underwriters.

Sether, who has studied home fire tragedies throughout the United States and Canada, says one of the big killers in dwelling fires has been the open central stairway, long an architectural feature in American homes.

"The open stairway is pretty," he says, "but it also provides a perfect path for the upward travel of flames and smoke when fire breaks out in the basement or a lower floor."

In his fire-safe home, the only stairway will lead from a downstairs playroom to the main living level and it will be enclosed and protected by an approved fire-door. This door also will be equipped to keep it closed at all times.

Architect Tafel was given four basic principles to meet in his design:

1. To reduce to a minimum the chances of fire ever starting in the house;

2. To prevent any fire which might start from spreading beyond the area of origin;

3. To design a house that would show the flexibility of materials permitted by the National Building Code developed by the underwriters, and

4. To show that fire-safety can be built into a house economically without sacrificing comfort, utility and attractiveness.

Although an atom-bomb shelter will not be part of this house there will be several features to increase its occupants' chances for survival in the event of an atom-bomb blast as close as a mile away.

The lower level of the house will nestle into a rocky hillside. The masonry walls and concrete floor slabs will afford good protection against heat, radiation and blast. And the location will be an advantage, being separated from New York City, 20 miles away, by a rocky ridge of hills.

Economy Asked In Design of Public Housing

HOUSING OFFICIALS of localities participating in the Federally-aided, low-rent public housing program are being asked to simplify the design of their projects in the interests of economy.

The Public Housing Administration, which administers the program, contends that "all unusual amenities that represent unnecessary expenses" can be eliminated from the design of low-rent projects.

According to the PHA, the program's guiding principle must be economy and suitability for the families to be housed.

PHA maintains that local housing authorities can achieve economy in planning and building public housing and still produce decent, safe and suitable homes for low-income families. The Housing Act of 1949 provides for 810,000 such units over a six-year period.

Regulation X Amended

THE FEDERAL Reserve System has amended Regulation X, which imposes real estate credit restrictions on houses purchased through conventional financing.

The amendment provides that the credit curbs shall not apply to any real estate construction credit extended before May 1, 1951, on houses put under construction before October 12 of this year—the date the regulation took effect.

Prior to the amendment, the regulation's prohibitions applied to all new houses started after August 3 for which conventional financing had not been arranged before October 12.

A Federal Reserve System spokesman said the amendment ends the need for persons "caught with their houses halfway up" under the original regulation to show special hardship. He said the number of such persons is small, that "very few" builders began construction during August 3 to October 12 without having credit commitments.

$7990 Buys a Bargain—in Philadelphia

ONE of the most popular new developments in Philadelphia is the Academy Gardens project. Demand for the houses, at $7990 each, has been so heavy that the builders are constructing far more than originally planned.

Offered in four designs and including an unfinished attic for future expansion, the two-bedroom homes bring the $7990 figure. This price includes a standard, landscaped lot with minimum dimensions of 60 by 100 feet. Corner houses and extra large lots are available at additional cost.

Despite the low price tag, there are plenty of "extras" in Academy Gardens homes. The unfinished attic has space for a bedroom and bath or two bedrooms. The 19x12-foot living-dining room has a wood-burning fireplace and a 16-foot window wall of Thermopane insulating glass.

Closets in the house are 8 feet long with sliding ventilated doors. Each house is provided with a kitchen range, some built-in furniture, venetian blinds and a revolving cabinet desk—all at no additional cost.

Radiant heat is provided by an economical gas-boiler operation.

The homes are VA and FHA approved. Original plans called for only 200 houses in the project, but the demand has been so great that hundreds more are scheduled or under construction. More than 500 have been built already.

Ultimately, the development will contain its own schools, churches and a shopping center. McCloskey & Co. are the builders and owners.

17 Houses Slated In Cheverly, Md.

Springmill Development Corp., 913 New York ave. nw., has applied for a permit to build 17 two-story and basement dwellings in the 5600 blocks of Greenleaf rd. and Hawthorne st. and the 2900 block of 56th pl., Cheverly. Construction will be of brick and cinderblock. The houses will be 35 by 30 feet each.

Fire Resistance Of Walls to Be Discussed

THE BUILDING Research Advisory Board will hold a conference on "Fire Resistance of Exterior Non-Load-Bearing Walls" at 9:45 a. m. Tuesday in the auditorium of the National Academy of Sciences building, 2101 Constitution ave. nw.

In announcing the conference, William H. Scheick, BRAB executive director, said that the subject was chosen because of its importance to research in new principles of design, engineering and construction dealing with "curtain wall" construction in large buildings.

The program has been planned to include discussions of new ideas in design and engineering and thorough coverage of present procedures in establishing criteria and codes regulating the fire resistance of walls. The interdependence and relationship between innovation and regulation will be a focal point for papers and discussions.

The conference will be the second research correlation session sponsored by BRAB.

New 'Recipes' Throw Light on Lighting

LIKE BAKING a cake, it is now advisable to haul out the recipe book when you're figuring how much light you want your lamps to throw, and where.

Seems there's a new approach to home lighting, based on "lighting situation formulas," or "recipes." Get hold of the recipe that applies to your situation, add a tape measure, and you're on the way to "pleasant, efficient and glare-free lighting."

Researchers of the Nela Park Lighting Laboratories at Cleveland, Ohio, word comes, have just completed an intensive study of home lighting. Here are samples of the key distances they worked out—four "recipes."

For desk work with a table lamp: base of the lamp should be 15 inches from your paper. And one foot in from the chair side of the desk. The lower edge of the shade must be raised 15 inches from the desk top. This, with a 150-watt bulb and diffusing bowl gives the preferred light.

For shaving and facial make-up: three fixtures are needed to light your bathroom mirror effectively. Each uses a 15-watt fluorescent tube. Left and right of the mirror, 15 inches from its center, two of these are mounted. Their vertical centers should be 60 inches above the floor. The third unit is fixed to the ceiling, centered above the washstand.

For reading or sewing with a table lamp: base of lamp should be 20 inches from your work. Large lamps—those measuring around 30 inches to the top of the reflector—are recommended. Minimum diameter for bottom of shade is 16 inches. Most important, this lower edge should be 17 inches above the table top.

For reading in bed with a wall lamp: distance between shade and mattress should be 30 inches. The lamp is centered over the head of the bed. Light source can be a 50-100-150 with a diffusing bowl, or a 50-100-150 indirect light without.

A lamp used for any close-vision job should be placed on your left if you're right handed. On your right if you're left handed.

Real Estate Roundup

Washington chapter of the Producers' Council sponsored a table-top exhibit last Thursday at the Mayflower Hotel of numerous building materials representing modern construction developments. Shown here are F. W. Youry, chapter president, left, Joseph H. Saunders, architect, center; Harry A. Morris of Thomas B. Bourne Associates. Object of their scrutiny is the Western Electric exhibit

A 50-man survey committee has been set up by the National Association of Home Builders to inform Federal housing officials of the status of housing construction throughout the country.

NAHB says full scope of the committee's work will be detailed soon. The aim is to determine the effect of Regulation X.

Fifty selected builders in as many cities will be responsible for helping to accumulate data and advising with the Government on a local, regional and national basis.

Annual convention and exposition of the NAHB, incidentally, is set for January 21 to 25 in Chicago. A record-breaking attendance is expected.

By the time the convention rolls around, NAHB says, "the impact of regulation X should be pretty well clarified and the informed judgment of lenders, manufacturers, distributors and builders will be presented to the Government."

Building material prices are edging down, according to the Housing Institute's housing letter, as a result of recent declines in lumber prices. However, the letter says, the wholesale price index for building materials is still about 16 percent higher than it was a year ago.

And for some materials, such as steel, more price increases are in the making, it predicts.

Representative Dewey Short (R., Mo.), was principal speaker Thursday before the enlarged realtors' Washington committee of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in Miami Beach.

The luncheon was part of NAREB's forty-third national convention, held in the Florida city all last week.

The fifty-eighth annual convention of the United States Savings and Loan League will be held here November 27 to December 1.

Speakers will include Charles T. Fisher, administrator of the Federal Reserve System's office of real estate credit. A round table on home building and financing is scheduled.

New Method Used In Construction Of Adobe Houses

A NEW METHOD of constructing adobe housing in California uses a wood post and girder frame which reduces the wall thickness to 8 inches and simplifies the work.

Redwood framing is considered the best wood for withstanding moisture that might be absorbed from the masonry filler.

There is no transverse shrinkage and longitudinal shrinkage is allowed for by timing construction so that the adobe fillers are put in only after the post and girders have been in place about three weeks.

Another problem solved is that of getting a tight joint between the post and the adobe. This is handled by milling a groove up and down the posts to serve as a mortar key. As an added tie, wire mesh is laid horizontally in the adobe courses about 20 inches on center and the ends bent up to the next course level and nailed to the posts.

Concrete footings are placed under each wall and a mortar key is incorporated to anchor the adobe filler walls at the base.

Application of mortar is similar to that on other blocks, except that an asphaltic emulsion is used, instead of lime.

From Chopping Boards to Zipper Oil

CHOPPING boards are an essential part of kitchen equipment. They save counter tops from mars and scratches and don't dull the sharp edges of finely ground knives. An especially handsome board is "Little Butch," a sturdy thick block with swivel glides that protect counter tops. It measures about 18 inches square.

ZIPPER lubricant is now on the market to ease the problems resulting from jammed and stubborn fasteners. The liquid is said to be stainless and not harmful to fabrics.

PRETTY party set for inexpensive table dressing is a clear plastic tree that stands in a little leaf-shaped dish. Four other leaf dishes complete the set, a novel service for hors d'oeuvres and snacks.

CEMENT that will firmly bond broken pieces of the most fragile china or the sturdy wood and metal on Junior's wagon is called Mill-Tite. It was developed by a hardware company that couldn't find an effective adhesive for one of their own products.

DESK for chair, bed or auto use is a curved board of blonde wood that rests on lap or chair arms. The company will inscribe a name in the corner, if desired.

SEARCH for the perfect coaster can end with a foam rubber base called "Ghoster." Eight different colored bases come in a set. The base grips onto a glass, bottle or beer can and will not come off until pried—a good feature for absent-minded drinkers who invariably return the glass to the bare furniture or floor. The varying colors eliminate second drink confusion.

ALL-IN-ONE lawn trimmer, hedge cutter and edger attaches to any quarter-inch electric drill for its power. The trimmer has a lightweight aluminum handle with rubber grip and operates as smoothly as a vacuum cleaner.

CONVERTIBLES can convert to rigid tops for winter with a new accessory called Add-A-Top, complete with rear window. No holes or alterations are made on the car. The top just slips into place. At present the top is available only for late Ford models but will soon cover all makes.

CARD PLAYERS have attracted a great deal of attention among manufacturers, resulting in a recent onrush of bridge-table products. There is a bracket that clamps onto the table legs and holds two glasses and an ash tray, leaving the table clear. For playing Canasta, we found a rubber disc that holds a fan spread of a large number of cards and a card box that shuffles up to three decks at a time.

Flower Shows Win New Friends

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

THE PARADE of flowers in the Washington area this autumn has been ever more spectacular than usual. In parks and gardens the quantities of bloom have pointed up the beauties of the city, and the quality of bloom at the many shows has been excellent. Doubtless Washington's autumn flowers will soon become as great a tourist attraction as those of spring.

The increased interest in flower shows is very gratifying and all the show committees report much larger crowds this year than last. Most of the visitors showed keen interest in the growing of flowers as well as simply viewing their beauty.

Year by year the shows have brown in number in spite of the fact that many of the clubs are now consolidating and holding one large exhibit. This year several new large "special flower" shows were added to the list—the narcissus show, the tulip show and that for gladiolus. These all drew capacity crowds as did the older exhibits such as the Potomac Rose Show, the Dahlia Show and the Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Alexandria exhibits.

VISITORS to the Garden Club of Virginia Lily Show this year in Fredericksburg remember the many splendid exhibits of the Virginia clubs, which have taken an especial interest in lily culture and the testing of new varieties. New hardy types of lilies are being so rapidly produced that it is said progress is being made in one year which formerly took many years to achieve. The new hybrids combine the beauties of many of the older types with the hardiness and beauty of new imports from faraway lands. Many of them are immune to usual lily ills.

Lilies . . . the new hybrids combine the beauty of older types with hardiness of recent imports

Mrs. H. Hartley Trundle, lily chairman for the Garden Club of Virginia, has issued the following test collection list for 1950-51, with dates of blooming in Leesburg, where Mrs. Trundle has the club lily test garden:

Amabile Luteum—2 feet, yellow, June 15-20. Formosanum Intermediate—30 inches, white fragrant, June 14-20. Backhouse hybrid—5-6 feet, Martagon shape-variable pale ivory through golds, apricot orange, June 12-16. Aurelium corsage—4-6 feet, variable-combination ivory, yellow warm apricot, June 23 to July 1. Candidum, Cascade strain—4 feet, fragrant white-mosaic free American grown bulbs) June 11-18. Fiesta hybrid—4 feet, yellow through orange to clear dark red. Full sun, June 21-July 3. Havemeyer seedling—to 6½ feet, variable in color-cross of Henryii and Sulphurum, July 23-August 1. Michiganese (native)—2 to 5 feet, scarlet turkscap, partial shade and moisture, July 2.

All the above lilies like a neutral soil with the exception of the Candidum, which likes a heavy sweet soil, and the Michiganese, which requires an acid soil.

THE LILY committee collection for 1950-51 has five varieties which should be of interest to the lily growers. Duchartrei (Tibetan), 2-4 feet, burnished copper color, June 20. Duchartarei (Tibetan), marble white flecked violet-reflexed blooms, bulbs characteristically small. Light acid soil; high humus content. Preferably on the dry side, wandering stem, give it room, June 20. Marhan (Martagon shape) hybrid 4-5 feet, burnished copper color, June 18. Aurelian "Delight," (Yerex) 4-6 feet, semi trumpet-ivory overlaid with burnt orange to clear yellow, June 23. T. A. Havemeyer hybrid, 2-5 feet, buff semi-trumpet-partial shade and moisture-acid soil, July 2. Martagon (purple), 3-5 feet, sandy loam grown bulbs-sweet soil, June. The committee list also include the Michiganese, which is on the Virginia test list.

In selecting lilies, time of blooming is important. Some gardeners prefer to have a lily "show" with a number of different varieties blooming at one time; others like to have their lilies spaced to bloom with other flowers which set off their form and coloring.

The following is a list of more generally grown lillies and their average time of blooming in the Washington area: Early May, L. rubellum, L. tenuifolium. Later May L. Japonicum, Washingtonianum, Martagon Album, Davuricum, Umbellatum, Croceum, Dauricum luteum, Umbellatum and Purple Martagon. Early June bloomers are the Regale, Hansonii, Shuksan, Amabile, Parri, Davidii, and the Madonnas or Candidum.

It's No Chore to Grow Narcissus at Home

By Alfred Putz

GROWING FLOWERS from bulbs for winter blooming in the home is considerably easier than most persons realize. This is especially true of paperwhite narcissus, Soleil d'Or narcissus. Chinese sacred lily (Narcissus orientalis), hyacinths and amaryllis. The first rule is to buy large, strong, healthy bulbs. Others are not worth the time and effort required.

Every year many millions of paperwhite narcissus are grown in pebbles and water because it is a nice clean method. But is it the best one? To prove to yourself that soil is a better growing medium, try both methods this year.

Shallow pans or strong shallow boxes supplied with sufficient drainage holes are filled loosely with equal parts of good garden soil and sand after a piece of crock is placed over each hole. Take out a teaspoonful of soil where each bulb is to go, then place the bulb firmly into the depression. Compact the soil around the bulbs, adding a little more if needed to cover about two-thirds of each bulb.

Give a good watering and put where the temperature comes close to 40 degrees. Also keep dark or at least in subdued light. A cool cellar is ideal, but a large cool closet also will do. Root action under such conditions will precede top growth and that encourages development of the best flower spikes. When roots are plentiful, light and a temperature between 60 and 65 degrees help them to make their best growth.

PAPERWHITE narcissus should not be started before the middle of November because the embryo flower within the bulb will not have progressed far enough before then to insure good results. For a continuous display of these sweet-scented, white flowers, start additional pans or boxes at two-week intervals through the winter.

Soleil d'Or and Chinese sacred lily are treated the same way. Hyacinths grown in pots or pans are much more foolproof than those grown in water. They are planted with a half to an inch of soil over the bulbs. Allow a half inch between the bulbs and keep them the same distance from the walls of the container. They root well at 55 degrees in the dark.

Even the thick, fat shoot must be kept dark until two to three inches long, when the flower spike should have cleared the neck of the bulb. After that, let them have lots of light but no sun and a temperature of 70 to 75 degrees.

Amaryllis are in some ways even easier to grow than any of the preceding because the usual living room temperature suits them well. This, too, is a bulb that must have a long enough rest to develop its embryo flower cluster before growing conditions are provided. Some gardeners keep them dry until the flower shoot has emerged from its off-center position. But the better way is to pot the bulbs in barely moist soil with the top third exposed. Such plantings should be kept between 40 and 50 degrees to encourage root growth. From time to time add a little water to keep the soil barely moist. Excessive heat or moisture will send up a mass of leaves, and where that happens the chance for flowers is very slim.

CROCUS, too, are easy in soil-filled shallow pans but unless they are kept cool—and that means not more than 40 degrees—results will be far from satisfactory. This same treatment applies to many of the other so-called small bulbs such as chionodoxa, scilla, eranthis and grape hyacinth.

One does not have to have a garden to grow these bulbs. But with a garden the list is increased to take in the hardy daffodil and tulip varieties suited to indoor growing. Hyacinths also are easier to handle where the rooting period can be taken care of outdoors. Starting these bulbs is the same. Tulips are covered about an inch deep.

There is no better or more convenient place to root bulbs than a deep coldframe that can be protected with a tight glass sash. There must be a good drainage, and placing the pans on an inch layer of cinders, coarse sand or ashes is highly recommended. Give them a thorough soaking before surrounding and covering with an inch of sand. When the thermometer drops below 30 degrees, add dry leaves gradually until the frame is completely filled. This layer should be at least six inches deep to prevent frost reaching the bulbs. Banking earth around the outside of the frame is also needed where winters are cold and so is an old rug or several thicknesses of burlap over the glass.

SHOULD a warm spell occur, prop up the sash an inch or so on the side opposite the wind direction. Where no frame is available, a pit 18 inches deep may be used.

The pans are ready to bring indoors when filled with roots. This may take from 11 to 15 weeks. Choose a balmy day for examining them. Any that are not well rooted, as seen when the pots are lifted, are put back for a longer stay. Indoors, raise the temperature gradually to 50 degrees and keep dark for a week or two. When the flower buds appear, 60 degrees is desirable but 70 will not hurt them. They grow faster and taller at the higher temperature but do not last as long unless put back into 60 degrees after the flowers have opened.

Thar's Gold in Them Thar Sunflowers

But They're Hard to Harvest

Wide World.

Burl Downey, central Illinois farmer, stands in the middle of a five-acre field of sunflowers. He is one of nine farmers cooperating with the University of Illinois on research to make sunflowers an important cash crop.

DECATUR, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP). Sunflowers some day may be added to the list of important Midwestern cash crops.

A new harvesting machine has brought University of Illinois agricultural specialists and a group of farmers here a step closer to that goal.

If you think the sunflower is just a big yellow flower, change your mind. It could have many more uses than just decoration.

Scientists say sunflower seeds contain more oil than soybeans, the fabulous Chinese plant which has made enormous strides in the Midwest in the past few decades. This is the center of the soybean territory.

Depending on variety, sunflower seed contains 27 to 32 percent oil, based on total weight, compared to 19 percent oil for soybeans. Moreover, sunflower seed meal tops the list of vegetable concentrates with 52.7 percent protein content.

Sunflower oil can be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, salad dressings, cooking oils and soaps. The meal can be used as a livestock feed.

WITH SUCH desirable attributes, why aren't sunflowers grown in greater quantity for harvesting?

The main reason is that they are difficult to harvest, particularly the giant varieties. Dwarf varieties were first grown in Illinois in 1944 by a group of Piatt County farmers. The project was inaugurated in cooperation with the University of Illinois and VioBin Corp. of Monticello, which processed the seed.

The University of Illinois' new harvesting machine attachment is being tested near here on the farms of nine cooperating farmers. Combined, they have a total of 50 acres in sunflowers.

The machine, mounted ahead of a standard small grain combine, closely resembles a corn picker. It was designed and built by the university's agricultural engineering department from a basic design of two 1949 senior students, Carl Jacobs and Warren Kent.

Two pairs of gathering chains, one mounted above the other, carry the sunflowers back to a knife which cuts stalks off about 15 inches above the ground. The lower chains are slanted upward so that their forward end runs close to the ground to pick up fallen sunflower heads.

The upper chains run faster than the bottom ones, throwing the stalks backward head first into the combine. As on a forage harvester or corn picker, sheet metal snouts are provided to lift fallen stalks and feed them into the gathering chains.

THE UNIVERSITY'S harvester is a one-row affair. But it could easily be manufactured by farm equipment companies as a two-row harvester once sunflowers become established as a cash crop, university engineers point out.

Development of the harvester has put sunflower growing on a completely mechanized basis. But there are other obstacles to be overcome before sunflowers can reach the level of corn and soybeans as cash crops.

"While the harvesting machine's performance is excellent, it will take a few years to develop standability (ability to stand up) in varieties before sunflowers become an important crop," says A. R. Ayers, agriculture engineer at the university.

Ayers cited the case of one field in which wind had blown over stalks and hindered harvesting. Further studies need to be made on better-yielding varieties and crop damage by disease, birds and insects, he said.

Let the Youngsters Choose Their Own Bedroom Decor

WHEN TWO CHILDREN share a room, let each have his own chest of drawers, desk, bookshelves, a divided section of the closet, and his own bed. It improves the morale all around.

The average child likes strong, bright hues, and variety in a room. If furniture and floor are drab and monotonous, it's not always easy to get him to be responsible for order in it.

You can solve this and still retain unity in the decorative scheme. Keep furniture shapes the same, but permit each child to select his own decorative designs.

Decals which can be removed or painted over, and replaced with a child's other favorite designs as he grows older, are practical on bleached or washable painted furniture. By letting each child choose his own design, you can make it his exclusive "signature."

Plaid washable wallpaper in blue, yellow and rose-beige will please either boys or girls. It goes well with a royal-blue bedspread and dresser-top for one child, and canary yellow for the other.

DOUBLE-DECKERS for two brothers or two sisters are excellent space-savers. If there is space, build a clothes closet at either end so each child can have his own closet.

Have a closed cupboard either below it for shoes and overshoes, or above it for extra storage space.

All of this is inexpensive if you use plain pine boarding and avoid intricate cabinet work. An unpainted chest of drawers, finished according to the color scheme, and a couple of easy chairs and small tables or plain desks complete the furnishings.

Children like painted headboards. Add a green or yellow wallboard and chintz-ruffled spread and curtains, and you have an attractive room.

You can make a smart desk by merely joining two sets of unpainted drawers with a board top, one for each child. Narrow open shelves on either side of the drawers will give the youngsters ample space to display their individual treasures.

A room shared by a baby and an older child requires careful planning. Place the child's bed in one corner and the baby's crib diagonally across from it to separate the two as much as possible. A movable screen can be used to divide the room when there is need for extra privacy.

For this dual-use room you will want two chests, one for each child. Place them side by side to save space. Like crib, bed and night-table, they can be painted. When the children are older, and the crib is replaced with a bed, all the pieces can be finished to match.

Everything in a child's room should be washable—curtains, bedspreads and, of course, furniture and flooring.

Taking Pain Out of Rain

LAUNDRY drying can be a problem, especially on damp, muggy days or when it's raining or snowing outside.

But, says the National Warm Air Heating and Air Conditioning Association, the home that has a warm air heating system has the answer.

By installing an extra large register in the side of the warm air duct running through the laundry room, the system can be used to dry the family wash. Or, if space limintations are such that compactness is a "must," a sheet metal man can build a laundry drying cabinet through which warm air from the furnace can be circulated.

It's Time to Think Up A Better Word for Kitchens

THE KITCHEN has come to the front in more ways than one.

Walk into a one-story up-to-date ranch-type house and find the kitchen off the front hall. Talk to architects and designers about house planning and they mention kitchens right off.

Why? Because what is happening to kitchens affects the whole house. And much is happening.

In the first place it's hardly fair to use the term kitchen any more. This area is no mere place to cook. The new concept of a kitchen may include the laundry, sewing center, hobby corner, work bench, child's play pen, flower arrangement counter and even the water heater, home heating plant and an incinerator.

Amazingly enough, all these parts can be arranged harmoniously in one central area of maidless, basementless homes today.

Cool cooking ranges, automatic clothes dryers, clothes washers, good ventilating fans, compact home heating units and water heaters make possible this new kitchen that becomes the springboard for planning the rest of the house.

Gas appliance manufacturers this fall introduced designs that not only perform better than older models, but also help coordinate this activity center of the house.

For one thing, they have concentrated on reducing pieces to unit sizes to match existing dimensions of base cabinets and work counter heights. Water heaters in metal jackets that match standard base cabinets can be found. Tops double as work surfaces.

Home heating plants have been reduced to compact shapes proportioned in unit sizes to line up neatly with washing machines or whatever.

More flexibility in planning a kitchen also is possible with one new gas range that comes in parts. An oven and a separate section of surface cooking burners can be installed at any level desired.

More color than ever before is found this year in all gas equipment. Even furnaces come in metal jackets painted soft gray, rosy beige, green or white. Incinerators for indoor use also appear in colors.

And, of course, decorator colors in ranges are possible. New home equipment can change the scheme of things at home.

The Danger Spot Is the Bedroom

The greatest number of home accidents—25 percent—occur in the bedroom, according to a recent National Safety Council study.

Next to the bedroom, the greatest number of fatal home accidents occur in the kitchen—10 percent; inside stairways—7 percent; and the yard, outside porch and steps with a combined 18 percent.

Decorators Favor Small Rugs to Lend Room Color

NYHT News Service

The days of the accent rug on a polished floor are back. The trend away from wall to wall carpeting and toward focal point rugs is partly a matter of sheer economics and partly a matter of contemporary house design.

Wall to wall carpeting requires more yardage, additional labor in installation and is more costly to care for than a rug. In modern homes where living areas flow into each other, the trend is toward concrete, cork tile, synthetic tile or linoleum floor coverings for the entire house with accent rugs used to divide a conversation group from a dining area.

The choice of accent rugs is growing by leaps and bounds. Some designs by foremost artists today are collectors' gems. Fine examples of contemporary art can be found in small rugs. Among artists recently turning their talents to rugs is painter Angelo Testa. He has created a group of hand-hooked, all-wool in sizes from 4 by 6 to 12 by 18. Geometric and abstract motifs are emphasized. Striking colors are used for some, while others rely on subtle design for interest.

Rugs are never innocuous backgrounds today. They are a bright spot on a shining floor.—HARRIET MORRISON.

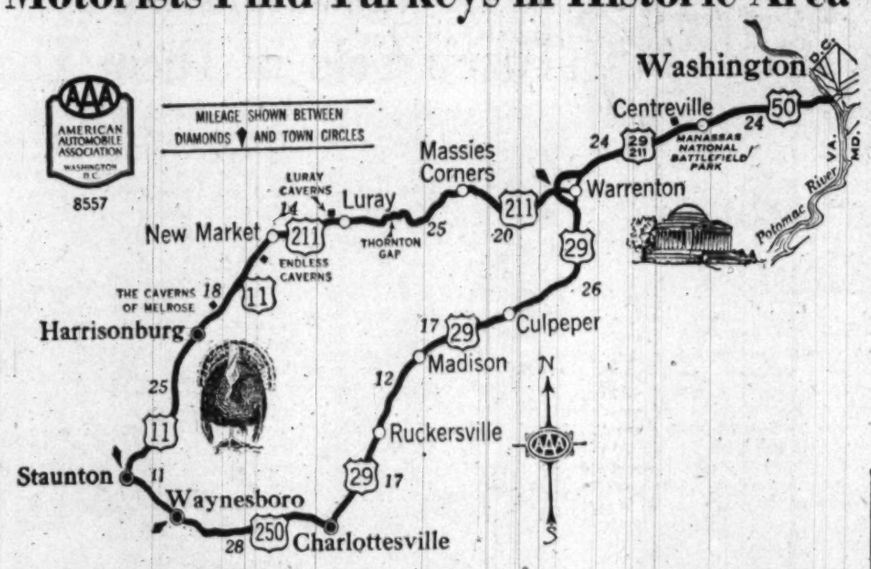
Fifth Largest Crop

Motorists Find Turkeys in Historic Area



By Walter Hubbard
American Automobile Association

FOUR HUNDRED years ago early explorers coming to the New World shipped the first wild turkeys to England. But it has not been until recently, as I noted on my trip to Europe last month, that the raising of domestic turkeys is assuming any great importance.

Now Mr. Turk is being accepted on the continent as a very important article of food, as he has been here for over 300 years.

Motorists to the Old Dominion State are finding that the turkey crop in Virginia is the fifth largest in the United States. There they are raising nearly two million birds this year—three for every household in the Commonwealth, and the greatest center for turkey raising and processing is in and around historic Shenandoah Valley.

Motor courts, restaurants, hotels and inns—as well as private homes—are largely buying the Virginia-bred and slaughtered birds, Maryland being that State's only competitor in this section of the East.

IT IS NATURAL that car owners will want to see "what goes" and for that reason many drive down, at this time of the year, to find rolling hillsides dotted with great white birds; or, possibly, the Bourbon Reds, Blacks, Slates or broad-breasted Bronzes. Some of the "apartment houses" for these holiday birds are big enough to house a company of cavalry, and these buildings are to be seen along with the incubator buildings and eviscerating plants.

Virginia's turkey crop is exceeded only by that raised in California, Texas, Minnesota and Iowa, and all of these States are considerably larger, geographically, than is the Old Dominion State. Some idea of the importance of this bird, as an article of food, is found in the fact that the per capita consumption of turkey has increased from less than two pounds in 1930 to approximately 4.5 pounds this year.

The trip, suggested by the American Automobile Association, involves about 310 miles of driving, and two days should be allocated for it so that a night's rest might be obtained in Harrisonburg or Staunton, the former being the seat of Rockingham County and the processing "heart" of the turkey area in West Virginia as well as Virginia.

THE FIRST 48 miles will take us westward over United States 50 to Centerville and over United States 29 and 211 to the junction at Warrenton. We continue in a westerly direction to Massies Corner for a score of miles and then drive, through a picturesque and lovely area in the mountains, through Thornton Gap to Luray, locale of the famous Luray Caverns and bell tower, as well as the Mimslyn Hotel.

Fourteen more miles and we are in New Market where, on May 15, 1864, an important battle in the Civil War was fought. Here it was that the youngsters from Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, were rushed into the fray to help stem the tide of victory by Gen. Franz Sigel's seasoned Union troops. Only 221 were left at the school, some of them but 14 years old. But they fought like heroes, captured a Northern battery and 80 prisoners, but left 55 of their number dead or dying on the field of battle when Sigel retreated.

Eighteen miles southwest of New Market lies Harrisonburg, and we pass the Caverns of Melrose on our way. Harrisonburg is an educational center in addition to being one of the great turkey markets of the world. The Lincoln Homestead, about nine miles north of the city on State 260, is a tourist objective. Here lived Abraham Lincoln's grandfather, and here was born Thomas Lincoln, father of the Civil War President.

BUT THE PEOPLE of Rockingham County, being loyal Virginians, don't talk much about Lincoln's family; they will tell you, however, that in Harrisonburg the first turkey steaks were cut, cooked, processed and promoted. In addition to turkeys, of course, other poultry is raised here and wholesaled to great centers in the east.

Twenty-five miles southwest of Harrisonburg is to be found Staunton, seat of two well known military academies and the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson. This latter house, now a national shrine, is located at Coalter and Frederick sts. and it is open to the public.

From Staunton we turn the nose of our car eastward and cut across the mountains, on United States 250 for 11 miles to Waynesboro, and then another 28 miles to Charlottesville, locale of the University of Virginia, founded by Thomas Jefferson.

NORTHEAST, over United States 29 for 17 miles and we are in Ruckersville, a small town through which we pass on our way to Madison and Culpeper. Several Civil War engagements took place at Culpeper, the two best known being the Battles of Cedar Mountain and Brandy Station. Here, too, is the birthplace of the great Confederate General, A. P. Hill, who was killed in April, 1865, in the defense of Petersburg. Here, in Culpeper, is to be found the grave of Betty Washington Lewis, sister of George Washington and wife of Fielding Lewis who made many of the guns used by the Continental Army.

From Culpeper we drive 26 miles northeast to Warrenton, seat of Fauquier County and a horse racing and fox hunting center of national reputation. Our return trip to Washington is made through Centerville and past the Manassas National Battlefield Park, site of the two Battles of Bull Run.

Get an early start when you drive down the valley and back, and drive with care, caution and consideration when twilight comes or a late Autumn haze settles over the countryside. You'll want to get back safe and sound with that 14-pound turkey.

Lack of Courtesy in Passing Causes Accidents

DISCOURTESY on the part of motorists in passing other cars on the open road is a frequent cause of serious and costly crashes, according to George R. Hammond, safety and education director, D. C. division, American Automobile Association, who is active in the courteous driver campaign now being conducted in this area.

"Recent observation on the streets and highways of nearby Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia discloses how frequently bad passing manners are encountered and provide a warning to the careful driver to be especially watchful," Hammond said.

"Last year four out of every hundred fatal accidents in rural areas were caused by improper passing and 12 out of every hundred resulted from cars being on the wrong side of the road, which may have occurred because of poor judgment in trying to pass.

"A good rule to follow in open road driving is to pass only when you are absolutely sure you can easily make it safely," Hammond suggested. "It is very easy to underestimate the distance required to overtake, pass and get back on your own side of the road. A generous margin of safety should be allowed. A driver who passes in tight situations, especially on curves and hillcrests, simply has no idea of the proper distance necessary for safe passing. To pass a car comfortably and safely at 50 m.p.h. for exmple, requires a minimum of about 10 seconds, and a clear unobstructed distance ahead of 1600 feet.

"In overtaking another car, you should know what is behind you. A glance in the mirror and especially a check of the blind area created by back corners in closed cars, is vital. A warning of intention to pass is important. When anyone signals his desire to pass, courtesy, as well as the law in most States, requires that the motorist in front do nothing to interfere, either by obstructing the roadway or increasing speed."

Matterhorn Hard to Conquer? Yes It Is

A CAT raises a question: Is Europe's mighty Matterhorn, majestically aloof among lofty Alpine massifs on the Swiss-Italian border, so mighty after all?

Hundreds of men have scaled it, the National Geographic Society notes. They include a blind man, and a cardinal who later became pope (Pius X). Scores of women, too, have won its summit. All got there the hard way. But now comes the report in the closing days of the 1950 climbing season, that a stray or truant cat, without benefit of ropes, pickaxe, or human aid, skittered to the top in the van of a party of veteran climbers. Has the Matterhorn lost stature?

The bleak rock pyramid, famous as it is, is a mere 285 feet higher than California's 14,495-foot Mt. Whitney. Most any seventh grader knows that Whitney, tallest in our 48 States, isn't really very high—not half as high as Asia's Mt. Everest, for example.

BUT THERE is the other side of the argument, notes the Society, and it is the winning side. The Matterhorn is and ever will be mighty, measured by man's ability to climb.

The peak's human conquerors invariably have been seasoned alpinists who have conditioned themselves for months or years on strenuous climbs. Almost as invariably, they have engaged one of the expert licensed guides who live in Zermatt or Breuil near the Matterhorn's base and who take several parties on the hazardous two-day ascent in the course of the short climbing season from mid-July to late August.

Thus, their success is hardly accidental. Nor are failures ever a complete surprise, for scores have lost their lives in falls from the sheer rock slopes that were proof against climbers for almost a century after neighboring Mt. Blanc had been conquered. On a tombstone in Zermatt's cemetery, one of many graves of victims bears the sufficient inscription: "He died not far from here."

Tragedy marred the success of the very first Matterhorn conquest. Edward Whymper, an Englishman, led the first conquering party to the crest on July 14, 1865, and lived 46 years thereafter to recount the tale. But four of the six others with him fell to their deaths in attempting the descent. One of the four bodies, that of Lord Francis Douglas, brother of the Marquis of Queensbury of boxing rules fame, was never recovered.

CASUALTIES now are comparatively rare, thanks to ropes maintained along critical stretches and huts equipped with food and supplies. Italy and Switzerland share the very summit, where the alpinist lingers but briefly in chilling wind to gaze in awe at the surrounding mountain giants, glaciers, and green valley strips of the two countries. Mt. Blanc's outline is visible in clear weather far to the west where Italy meets France.

At Visp in the Rhone Valley, visitors to Switzerland board the narrow-gauge railroad for Zermatt and the Matterhorn. The cars climb 3150 feet in the 22-mile southward trip up the Nikolai Valley, aided by rack-and-pinion gear. Mile-high Zermatt's population of 1300 consists chiefly of alpinist and winter sports guides, keepers and staffs of 25 inns and pensions, and their families. Skiing, sleighing, curling, and hockey feature the winter sports program.

Map of Arlington Falls Church and Alexandria Out

A new, five-color map of the Alexandria, Arlington County and Falls Church area has been issued by the D. C. division, American Automobile Association. Charles F. Pratt, supervisor of touring services, says that "it locates 103 communities in northern Virginia, Washington and parts of nearby Maryland."

Prepared under the direction of Col. David F. Jamieson, who was formerly with the United States Army and Air Forces mapping services and who now heads the AAA's cartograph department. The map in colors has, on its reverse side, a black and white map of Washington, as well as short histories, illustrated with photographs, of Alexandria, Mount Vernon, Arlington County and the District of Columbia.

The map is being distributed at the AAA offices in Alexandria, Washington and Silver Spring, Md.

Farmers Planning Third Trip to Europe

By Orval Hopkins

A SPECIAL Christmas sailing to Germany on the Swedish American liner Stockholm is scheduled to sail from New York direct to Bremerhaven December 9 . . . United States farmers will call on their fellows in the British Isles this winter to ask "How's crops?" and other fool questions, according to some data sent me by Trans World Airline. TWA and a travel outfit of Omaha, Nebr., are booking the third annual tour . . . The Pennsy line announces that a new Congressional and a new Senator, high-speed trains from here to New York and Boston, will be placed in service "as soon as their complement of new cars can be built." A total of 66 new cars will be required for the four trains in the Congressional and Senator service.

BOOKLET called "Winter Resorts and Ranches" has been issued by the Santa Fe (80 East Jackson blvd., Chicago 4) which tells all about what's going on for the winter in the colorful Southwest . . . American Express reports that Mexico City, with a population of 1,972,351, has about 1000 organized baseball teams, more than New York with its 7,454,995 . . . OUR OWN Uh-Huh Dept.: "Tourists would think twice before going to St. Thomas, the capital of the Virgin Islands. Uncle Sam's idyllic dot of land in the Caribbean is full of mainland Americans who went for a holiday—and stayed to call it home." From Pan American World Airways.

THE ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., charm school yesterday graduated 261 young women in "personality and body developing arts" . . . The thoroughbreds start running on south Florida tracks November 30 and the Miami $10,000 open golf tourney begins the 29th . . . Tom Smith of the Miami Beach News Bureau forwards the clear gen that "Although turtles which live in the Atlantic Ocean off Miami Beach are rarely seen, the females come ashore at night to lay eggs. They then bury the eggs in the sands, where they hatch beneath the heat of the sun." . . . It's open season until December 10 in New Jersey on quail, rabbit, squirrel, pheasant, ruffed grouse and partridge, and until December 27 on American and red-breasted mergansers, coot, ducks and geese.

Ratproof Construction Keeps 'Em Out

BEST WAY of achieving rat control in dwellings is to start with ratproof construction, according to the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

In HHFA's Technical Bulletin No. 14, it is pointed out that such construction involves interior and exterior ratproofing and the elimination of interior structural harborages.

Rats may be kept out of new houses by removing all non-essential openings and by ratproofing all essential openings wider than one-half inch, the article says.

All sheet metal, expanded metal, wire cloth and screening should be galvanized or of non-rusting metals or metal alloys.

To aid rat eradication through ratproof construction, a comprehensive program is recommended which includes:

Passage of a local ordinance requiring the ratproof construction of new structures; ratproofing specifications in other regulations; cooperative programs with manufacturers of building materials; educational campaign in the building industry.

Technical Bulletin No. 14 is available from the superintendent of documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at 20 cents a copy.

Extra Storage Space for Extra Supplies

EXTRA STORAGE for the extra supplies needed by today's homemakers can be provided in nearly any kitchen, according to a Tile Council of America home modernization report.

Here are some of its suggestions for solving the problem of inadequate or badly located storage space:

An additional shelf built in below present wall cabinets will take care of spices, juice glasses and even small cans. Only 15 inches of space is needed between wall cabinets and the workspace under them, so don't let additional area go to waste if you can use it in this way.

If your kitchen sink has a drainboard at only one side, consider building a case cabinet at the other. The space beneath the sink can be turned into valuable storage space.

A floor-to-ceiling cupboard can be built into as little as a foot of waste space beside the kitchen range.

A table on wheels or casters will greatly simplify meal preparation in a poorly arranged kitchen. You can assemble materials on it, use it as a work surface and later wheel supplies back to their storage spot.

'New' Kitchen at Small Cost

A trip to the dime store brought about the smile this young lady is wearing. She bought some two-inch decal borders there, dunked them in water, and eased them into place. The result? A new look in the kitchen

Many Colors for Roofs

Home owners planning to reroof with asbestos-cement shingles now have a choice of many new colors, including greens, blue-blacks, reds, browns and white. Vari-colored shingles also are available.

Re-Siding Cuts Fuel Costs

Re-siding an old home frequently results in lower heating costs. The tighter construction blocks air leaks and reduces wind infiltration.

Check Up on the Radiators –Winter's Bound to Come

WITH WINTER on the way, now is a good time to make a quick check of the radiators in your home to see that they are functioning efficiently.

A radiator against an outside wall may bring the wall's temperature up as high as 125 degrees, and much of that seeps through to the outside air. The wrong paint on a radiator can cut its heat 15 percent, and a poor radiator cover can lower its efficiency as much as 50 percent.

Every radiator should be thoroughly cleaned at the beginning of the cold season. Dust on it forms an insulating coat, and, when heated, is often irritating to occupants of the room.

When radiators are located against outside walls, much of their heat is wasted unless a good reflector is installed next to the wall. A reflector will throw heat back into the room and thus cut the amount needed. Aluminum foil or any bright metal which will not tarnish makes a good reflector.

Radiators under windows are notorious dust-catchers. It's wise to have them enclosed.

If a radiator is to be refinished, an oil rather than a metallic paint should be used. Metallic paints, studies show, can reduce the heat given off by as much as 15 percent.

New Home Buyers Have Plenty Left For Furnishings

NEW YORK, (AP).—The effect of new home buying on various industries is shown by a survey of families in the vast Levittown community on Long Island.

Conducted by the "Magazine of Building," it indicates that the 15,000 families who will be living there by next February will spend $21,805,000 in their first year of occupancy for furnishings and home accessories—an average of $1432 per family.

The survey was based on a sampling of 100 families who had been in their new $8000 homes for eight months to a year. They had spent $39,268 for new furniture.

Projected for 15,000 families, this indicated an expenditure of $5,890,200 for furniture. Automobile prospects amounted to $5,709,750.

Story of Faith Is Incomplete Without Charity

By Richard L. Coe

THIS IS A story of Faith, hope and charity.

You who con the Hollywood items have no doubt heard of Faith Domergue, a lady who, until this week, I had begun to doubt existed.

Faith is now 26 and when she was 15 Howard Hughes, who had previously performed the same gallantry, with a gamut of results, for Jean Harlow and Jane Russell, "discovered" her on his yacht at Balboa, Calif.

It was a question of talent recognition at a glance and from my meeting this week with Miss Do-MERGH (the publicity man said to call her), I have a notion that it was her huge, brown eyes that did the trick, since the lady declares she was not especially prepossessing as a teen-ager.

"I was pudgy and quite unattractive," she told me, "but right at our first meeting Mr. Hughes decided I had talent. So he immediately signed me to a seven-year contract and sent me back to school to improve my education."

This was way before Pearl Harbor and the coast wires were abuzz with the story of the plane manufacturer-movie producer's latest discovery. The first contract ran out and she's since signed another, also of seven years' duration, been married, become a mother, lived a couple of years abroad and her first picture has yet to appear.

But it will next Wednesday at Keith's, a matter called "Where Danger Lives," in which her costar is Robert Mitchum. To confuse you further, this is really her second picture, her first, completed several years ago, being "Vendetta" and now scheduled as Hughes' Yule gift to the Nation.

DON'T GET the idea, please, that Miss Domergue merely yachted into the Industry.

She was born in the Vieux Carre of New Orleans of a French father and a French-Spanish mother. I was about to illustrate her international flavor by further pointing out that she is the wife of an Argentine film director, Hugo Fregonese, who works for Universal International, and has a home in Buenos Aires, which, she points out is in Argentina, not Brazil, but there I go again getting ahead of my tasty story.

Her official biography goes at some length into her personality:

"Her intensely superstitious nature she attributes to the early influence of her French-speaking Negro nurse, an otherwise reasonable woman with a savage scorn for all doctors, who used to throw away prescribed medicines and perform Voodoo and Gri-Gri rites to exorcise the malignant devils which from time to time visited little Faith with run-of-the-mill infant maladies.

"'I remember having a cold once,' Miss Domergue recalls, 'which Emilie cured with the magic of a crude halter of black chicken feathers, placed on my neck with much ceremony, incantation and nervous glances in the direction of my mother's bedroom.'"

"Faith was still rolling hoops," Carl Byoir & Associates, Inc., continue, "when she decided to be an actress after seeing her first play. It was a strictly straw-hat production, she realizes now, but, at the time, its magic kindled the unquenchable ambition which has finally rewarded her with stardom. Her parents discouraged such daydreaming at that early age, though Faith admits that she composed many bloody dramas which she enacted with Bravura (her sister?) for the delighted Emilie whose theatrical demands leaned to good strong melodrama with African overtones."

FORTUNATELY for her theatrical ambitions in the early 30s her father, as has many a father of many a screen dream, "decided to come to California," where Faith was sent to Beverly Hills Catholic School and "subsequently to Santa Monica's convent for a careful education befitting a young lady reared in the New Orleans tradition."

"In 1942," this fascinating biography continues, "her education completed (she was then, according to the biography, 16), the butterfly emerged from the cocoon in the form of a slender Latin beauty, with eyes like pools of hot oil smoldering in a cloud of dark hair.

"Unrecognizable from the lean little infant Bernhardt who used to perform for her Negro 'Mammy,' Faith was now a graceful 5 feet 6 inches, 116 pounds of loveliness, endowed with the poise of many accomplishments. She spoke French and Spanish with the confidence of a native, played the piano creditably and sang in a provocative contralto which will be heard to advantage in a haunting Corsican folksong in 'Vendetta.'"

Coolidge Event

Festival Gives Rise To Fine New Music

By Paul Hume

A GOOD music festival is one that looks both forward and back to past eras. A successful festival also acts as an instigator of future events.

A well planned and executed sequence of festive concerts brings forward new music, new artists, and vital performances of new and old works.

Two weeks ago the Library of Congress presented the Eleventh Festival of Chamber Music, given under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. Four new works were heard during the five concerts comprising the festival, and remarkable performances of familiar music gave new prospective to music we thought we knew.

Questions that always follow the first performance of new music are: who will perform these new pieces? How often will they be heard? will a substantial public develop for them or will they pass into oblivion for lack of appreciation on intrinsic worth?

WILLIAM SCHUMAN'S string quartet, played at the Saturday night concert, was a disappointment to most of the audience, musicians and laymen alike. Its cerebral astringency gave no chance for enjoyment of anything but Schuman's known ability as an architect of musical patterns.

Such a quartet is not likely to be requested by amateur quartets; and professional ensembles will hardly be interested in spending the time and work needed to prepare it.

Robert Palmer's quintet for piano and strings is a different matter. It is well made but has little to say either to those who love beautiful musical sound or those who study and appreciate structure in composition.

It is as well made as hundreds of compositions being written by our abler musical students today. But it lacks a quality Palmer has usually displayed: the gift of melodic interest or arresting rhythmic style.

AARON COPLAND'S name was brightest of those composers heard during the festival. His new piano quartet was brilliantly played and received with acclaim. It stood between magnificent readings of Mozart's E Flat and Brahms' G Minor piano quartets.

Yet Copland has such mastery of tone and form, and moves so easily in the creating fresh new music that he achieved solid success in the face of such competition. Neither of his younger compatriots' music passed beyond the stage of technical facility.

Copland, who can be described as having passed through phases such as those Schuman and Palmer are still enduring, rose over technical means to deliver music made more telling because of his contrapuntal mastery—music more beautiful because of the simplicity that maturity proves essential—and music that can be bright because its author knows how necessary it is that moods be varied in order to continue to attract.

TRUE, Copland's quartet was played better than the other intimate novelties. Yet it was the music that spoke winningly. And "winningly" is not a word often associated with Aaron Copland's music.

It was Copland too, who won the day among modern composers at the final concert, with his Appalachian Spring. This is an accepted piece of superbly American music. It could have come from no other country.

And its performance, with members of the National Symphony Orchestra under Howard Mitchell, was one that satisfied the composer and brought universal approval from the audience.

Mitchell has made this music his own in a very personal way. He follows the composer's instructions to the letter. This is a striking fact if one compares his reading with that of Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony on records. For Koussevitsky falsifies many passages, distorting them to suit his own conception of what music ought to be. Yet how else can a composer be recorded unless he allows a conductor his so-called interpretation.

THE new work in the final concert was a set of five folk fables by Gian Francesco Malipiero. These were sung by Jennie Tourel, with the orchestra. It was one of those times when performers made music sound better than it really is.

Van Druten Play Rates Applause; Detroit Man Likes 'The Relapse'

BROADWAY LIGHTS.

The first-nights: John Van Druten, whose "Voice of the Turtle" and other comedies were long-run hits, returned with "Bell, Book and Candle" at the Barrymore Wednesday evening . . . The stars are the Rex Harrisons (Lili Palmer), whose magic (reported the Times) "wove a spell around the audience" . . . A majority opinion led by Mr. Atkinson cheered: "An evening full of delight" and three of the reviewers used "enchanting" to describe it . . . The Herald Tribune's undertaker dissented . . . "It wears," Mr. Barnes mournfully noted, "very thin" . . . producer Irene Selznick, whose first offering was "Streetcar Named Desire," is indifferent to this veto. She reports an advance ticket sale of $250,000 at the box-office—without the ticket brokers . . . The only other new entry was Paul Crabtree's first play, "A Story for a Sunday Evening," a slapdash spoof, part Saroyan, part Olsen and Johnson and part whatzit . . . The reviewers found it more confusing than entertaining. Time mag's sumup of "Hilda Crane": "One of those studies in scarlet chronicled from the first sleeping partner to the final sleeping pills."

THE NEW PLAYS: Detroit's Russell McLaughlin enjoyed "The Relapse," the 254-year-old Restoration comedy which is due at the Morosco Theater Wednesday night . . . "Cyril Richard's Lord Foppington," he reports, "is the richest imaginable caricature. His behavior as a mincing fop is almost unbearably funny" . . . Boston's Elliott Norton, covering "Ring 'Round the Moon" (which comes to the Martin Beck Thursday evening), gave it a happy notice. It is beautifully produced and staged, he chronicled, and acted "with elegance which suits its mood and tone magnificently" . . . Variety's sentry in Chicago counseled that "Angels in the Pawnshop" is "not ready for Broadway" . . . More lulls than laughs.

THE CINEMAGICIANS: "Cyrano de Bergerac," starring Jose Ferrer, takes to the camera gracefully, albeit one oracle suspects the classic will be best appreciated by the carriage trade . . . "Copper Canyon" is the familiar anecdote about cowboys taming the wild West and Hedy Lamarr taming cowboys . . . "Right Cross" derives some punch from Dick Powell and June Allyson, but the film fails to make the weight . . . A rather jolly Britisher is called "Last Holiday." Alec Guiness is, of course, his droll self . . . "Breakthrough" skips sham heroics and displays the grim side of war . . . "The Red Angel" is a conventional crime meller . . . "L'Affaire," a French immigrant, is amour with the customary Paree tang and "Marriage of Figaro" from Germany is a flopera.

STAGE DOOR: The Marquis de Cuevas is expected to decide this week about his ballet. Tax problems may force its closing at the Century Theater . . . With his "Country Girl" firmly set at the Lyceum (as the season's first dramatic smash), Author Clifford Odets has returned to his desk to complete three new plays. They are: "The Season," "By the Sea" and "The Tides of Fundy" . . . Tamara Geva returns in "Pride's Crossing" at the Biltmore Theater tomorrow night. On Wednesday evening her husband (John Emery) opens in "The Relapse," the only other Mr. and Mrs. legit team working at the same time . . . That yelling you may have heard was the agonized screams of Met Singer Tagliavini—after reading the Post's criticism that his claque out front gave a more convincing performance than he did . . . Mervyn Nelson has signed Gloria El-

Godfrey's 'Mug'

A Good Right Arm Is Taking a Rest

By Sonia Stein

WHEN THE gentle background giggle disappeared from the morning Godfrey show, and the pretty self-effacing girl disappeared from the Godfrey elbow on the Wednesday night TV show, the audience noticed it. What's more, the audience cared.

Margaret (Mug) Richardson, secretary and "good right arm" to Arthur Godfrey for 16 years, has a loyal following all her own. Letters poured in, the phone buzzed. Where was "Mug"? Where had she gone?

She'd come home, and Godfrey's loss is Washington's gain.

In the frantic existence of Godfrey and those who surround him, the "unpredictable" Godfrey could be counted on for one thing—to give "Mug" a thorough scolding—sarcastic or vituperative—from time to time. And Miss North Carolina of 1934 could be counted on to hand it right back.

So it was nothing like a hot argument that dissolved the Godfrey-Richardson work team after 16 years. They still have the highest regard for each other.

Godfrey doesn't talk about "Mug" leaving. He says only, "She resigned and I am very sorry she did."

"Mug" doesn't talk about it either.

COLUMNISTS have speculated it was because of a personal tragedy in her life. "Mug" had spent her summer vacation with the Godfrey family in Hawaii and had come back to New York in late August to get married. The day she arrived in New York, her fiance, FBI man Myron Gurnea who had worked on the Amerasia case and the million-dollar Brink's robbery in Boston, was drowned in a yachting accident on the Potomac.

"Mug" was in Oregon for Gurnea's funeral when the Godfreys arrived in California and suggested "Mug" join them there and travel east with them. "Mug" went to her family in Raleigh, instead, but she reported for work on schedule with material for the first TV show. Shortly afterward she left, with no fireworks.

I doubt that either Arthur or "Mug" knows to a fine point why she left but judging from what "Mug" has been doing these past few years and what her future plans are, it appears that the beauty contest winner who wanted to learn about broadcasting has grown into an imaginative and astute judge of TV who needs more room to exercise her abilities. Godfrey and his whole staff are so competent "Mug" is no longer vital except for good humor and moral support. Anybody who has been a constructive and successful adviser, buffer, planner and severest critic for a performer through the years, often works himself right out of a job, just when he's at the peak of his ability. "Mug" is nobody to sit around when the job is done and now there's a TV program of her own lurking in the short-cropped blond head. Since radio and TV ideas are not copyrightable. I can't tell you what the format is but it sounds wonderful. As soon as she's had a rest, "Mug" will offer the show to a network.

AND WHAT is most interesting to Washingtonians is that "Mug" wants to originate the show from here, her permanent home since 1934.

In New York "Mug" lived in a furnished hotel-apartment and just this week brought bag and baggage to her Washington apartment, discovering to the embarrassment of her storage facilities that the split weeks she spent in New York and Washington meant she has duplicates of articles most people have one of.

When "Mug" passed through Washington en route from Raleigh, N. C., to the Miss America contest in 1934, Godfrey interviewed her on WJSV. He also interviewed her for a job. After a few miserable weeks in New York, modeling while she waited for the contest at Atlantic City to start, "Mug" came back to Washington to stay with a friend. Godfrey ran into her and repeated his job offer. She accepted.

"You'll have time to take elocution lessons if you work for me," Godfrey told her, knowing she wanted to lose her Carolina accent. "Mug" took two lessons and abandoned the project when she discovered the Godfrey job started at the crack of dawn when Godfrey went on the air.

Stars Find A New Glow In New York As TV Rises

By Mark Barron

NEW YORK (AP)—Not since those days of the late 1920's when Broadway stage stars were seeking any possibility to reach the West Coast has there been so much transcontinental travel among theatrical performers as is happening now with the early boom of television shows.

In the 1920's Al Jolson and many other Broadway stars who never had the slightest idea they would appear in movies until talking pictures came, were flocking to Hollywood to take advantage of that new bonanza in the entertainment world, the Vitaphone and its kindred elements.

Even Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, stars of the New York Theater Guild dramas, had spurned lush movie offers until talkies came along. Then they went West to make a talkie of "The Guardsman," one of the hit plays they had done on Broadway. Since then they have refused to venture into the movies again.

Hollywood talkies took many other Broadway stars and supporting talent to the West Coast, but they are flocking back to Broadway now that Eastern television stages are expanding.

APPROXIMATELY one fourth of Broadway theaters have been taken from stage and screen shows to provide showcases for growing television and radio industries.

This return of stars to Broadway, mainly with the idea of getting in on the ground floor of television, has aided the grand dame of the amusement industry, the legitimate theater. Stars who were confining their activities to the film studios again are available on the East Coast.

Fredric March, Florence Eldridge and Morris Carnovsky, who were on the verge of becoming first citizens of the cinema citadel, will open on Broadway shortly after Christmas in a revival of Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People."

But, they didn't return from Hollywood for the sole, noble and high purpose of reviving Ibsen. The television stages, they realize, are within a hop, skip and jump of the Broadway stage where they will rehearse this Ibsen play which will have a new adaptation by the playwright, Arthur Miller, who wrote the current Broadway hit, "Death of a Salesman." In between stage performances, you will see March, Carnovsky and Miss Eldridge on many television dramas.

SOME stage stars, like Lunt and Fontanne, have tried the movies, have tried radio, have tried television now and then, but they always return to the stage as their "home, sweet home" base.

Tallulah Bankhead was splendid in the cinema story of "Lifeboat" and she has been exciting, glamorous and fog-horn voiced in many television and radio programs.

But, the other night when she followed some of her television appearances with a highly successful debut as mistress of ceremonies for NBC's radio presentation of big stars, she spent several air moments boasting, and with good cause, of her successful stage tour in "Private Lives."

She, too, is staying around the television outlets while she rehearses the French stage comedy, "Nina," by M. Roussin. This stage play is to be produced by Gregory Ratoff, that "Grand Hotel" character who speaks with a Russian accent, once removed from Minsk—and when he starts work with Alabama-born Miss Bankhead . . . that should be a better show than any that could be placed on the stage.

AS THE new Broadway shows come in, they are luring back other stars who want to use familiar Broadway as a springboard to the up and coming television, such celebrated performers as Claude Rains, Franchot Tone, Gertrude Lawrence, Nanette Fabray, Vincent Price, Nina Foch and Bert Lahr.

At Arena Stage

Shrew Being Given New Treatment

FIRST PRODUCED in the 1590's as "The Tamynge of a Shrowe," Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" is enjoying a new metamorphosis at Arena Stage these weeknights.

Director Edward Mangum has turned his auditorium into virtually a stage for his high-spirited production. He observes that there have been as many versions of the comedy as theatrical personalities who've acted in it.

"MANY recent productions," the Arena director points out, "have tended to make it a brutal farce, with Petruccio overcoming Kate through whip-cracking and brow-beating. In our production we try to show that Shakespeare meant something more subtle, yet more comical, and that central staging affords our actors a chance to convey the fine as well as the broad comedy effects inherent in the play's lines."

Playing the title roles currently are Pernell Roberts, who acted both Major L'Enfant and Gov. Clinton in last summer's "Faith of Our Fathers," and Anne Chodoff, who followed a successful university dramatic career with professional parts in the stage's "Pal Joey" and radio's Henry Aldrich program.

The comedy will remain at the New York ave., Ninth st. house through December 2, with matinees this week Thanksgiving Day and Saturday.

Alexandria Theater

"The Madwoman of Chaillot" will be presented by the Alexandria Little Theater for four nights starting Monday, December 4.

Kay and Emil Burn are serving as producers for the Jean Giraudoux fantasy, as adapted by Maurice Valency, with Meg Stallings and Dod Looker as directors.

Variety shows will be given tonight and tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at the first Golden Age Hobby Show in the Commerce Department auditorium.

STANDING ROOM ONLY seems to be the word these nights at the Dupont, where "Bitter Rice" is the lure. Sylvana Mangano makes her debut in a leading role of this Italian picture about the rice fields of the Po Valley

G&S in Final Week at Balto.

LONDON'S D'Oyly Carte Gilbert and Sullivan company starts its final week tomorrow night at Ford's Theater, Baltimore, with a performance of "The Gondoliers," which will be repeated Tuesday evening.

Other operas to be given during the week include "Iolanthe" on Wednesday matinee and evening, "The Mikado" Thursday night, and a double bill Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday afternoon of "Cox and Box" and "The Pirates of Penzance."

The company is not coming to Washington on its current tour, which next takes them to Philadelphia for a month. Seats may be purchased locally at Mrs. Stabler's ticket mart in Brentano's book shop on F st.

Mangum to Address Westmoreland Unit

The monthly meeting of the Westmoreland Players tomorrow night will be addressed by Edward Mangum, director of Arena Stage.

Meetings are held in the Congregational Church at Westmoreland cr. at 8:30. Mangum, formerly with the Mount Vernon Players and the George Washington University speech and drama department, will discuss the adaptability of plays to the arena type theater. The public is invited.

Gayety Offers Matinee on Thanksgiving

THE GAYETY Theater's customary Wednesday matinee will be dropped this week in favor of an afternoon performance Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, of "Born Yesterday."

Max Gordon's production marks the first Washington view of this Garson Kanin comedy, set in a Washington many will recognize. Though it's enjoyed a three-year New York run, a London version under the direction of Laurence Olivier, and productions in Paris, Vienna and Australia, tomorrow night's opening will be the first view the American capital has had of this comedy about itself.

More theater news on pages 4 and 7.

Donald Oenslager's setting is a $235 per day hotel suite. He says that he designed it to show just how much bad taste a lot of money could buy.

Price scale for the two-week Gayety run with Judy Holliday in her starring role, will be from $1.20 to $3.60 evenings with a $3 top at matinees.

Falls Church Yule Fete

The Falls Church Community Theater will hold the group's Christmas Party on December 15 at the Odd Fellows Hall.

AT THE PLAZA: Michael Denison and Dulcie Gray have the leading roles in "My Brother Jonathan," the British film adapted from a novel by Francis Brett Young now on the Plaza screen

Casting Completed On C. U. Fry Play

Director Leo Brady this week completed casting assignments for "Thor, with Angels," the Christopher Fry play which will open a two-week run December 1 at Catholic University's campus theater.

Reservations for the Fry play, originally written for the Canterbury Cathedral Festival of 1948, may be made at the university box office, MIchigan 6000.

Copland Scores at 11th Festival of Music

By the sheer genius of her superlative diction and musical insight, Tourel, with keenest support from the orchestra, turned Malipiero's weakish phrases into sparkling episodes of narrative beauty.

Tourel shone earlier in Mozart arias, in Ravel's Chansons Madecasses, and in the Songs and Dances of Death by Moussorgsky. In the realm of high standards set during the festival, her name leads the rest.

BUT Tourel's name must be coupled with that of the incredible pianist, Mieczyslaw Horszkowski. It was Horszkowski's piano playing that brought thundering shouts of praise from the audience at the close of the program of piano quartets. He is a rare master of his art and instrument. He will play at Howard University on December 7, for those lucky enough to hear him.

The work of Mitchell and the orchestra that closing night must be praised for the excellence of its sound and the brilliant handling of Mozart, Copland, and the intricate Malipiero. Only in Stravinsky's Apollon Musagete were there moments when the strings did not achieve the precision needed for a flawless account of this unique score.

Thus the festival brought out one excellent new work, revived music of high interest and beauty, and contributed notably to the finest standards of interpretation. Few festivals ever do more.

Claudio Arrau, left, Chilean pianist, who plays Wednesday with the National Symphony. Jeannette Macdonald, favorite soprano, singing in concert this afternoon in Constitution Hall. David Wells plays a cello recital tonight in the National Gallery

The Music Box

Concert List Is Abundant In Suburbs

THE SUBURBS threaten to overwhelm the city today in numbers of concerts.

Both the Montgomery County and the Alexandria Civic Orchestras open their season at 4 this afternoon. At the same time in Alexandria, St. Clement's Church presents two organists and choir in a program inaugurating its new organ.

An outstanding new instrumental ensemble debuts this afternoon in Barker Hall. It is the Society of Wind Instruments of the Army Band. Such an organization can draw upon real riches in literature designed for various combinations. Their program is an excellent list.

Augmenting all these is the fine program Jeannette MacDonald is singing in Constitution Hall.

Cellists take the spotlight early this week, with David Wells tonight in the National Gallery, and Alta Quinones tomorrow night in the Phillips Gallery. Miss Quinones comes to her recital in company with one of the fine names in American music: Eric Delamarter, former associate conductor of the Chicago Symphony. Delamartar is living in Washington, where his years as a rare musician, composer, organist, pianist, and conductor cannot help influencing our life for good.

REAL NEWS: Two American symphonies will be heard in Constitution Hall on two successive nights this week. Tuesday night Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia men play the new, third symphony of Paul Creston. This work received loud commendation last week in New York and Philadelphia.

Wednesday night, Howard Mitchell conducts the second symphony of Howard Hanson, a score the composer subtitles "Romantic." Mitchell's program also includes a new American overture by Walter Huffman.

Not many people heard Roberta Long sing on United Nations Day in front of the District Building. But Miss Long, who has one of the most beautiful voices heard in many years, will sing a recital Saturday night at the International Student House. If you want to be able to say in a few years that you heard her when she was just launching her career, you'll get over to R st. on Saturday.

Student programs this week: members of the Friday Morning Music Club sing Monday night at the Arts Club at 8:15. And the Dmitrieff Studio presents three young pianists in recital at 6 this evening, in the studio.

P. H.

Mitchell to Have Arrau as Guest

Howard Mitchell balances music and artist this week.

Claudio Arrau, noted Chilean pianist, will play twice on the program. First, he is down for the C Minor Concerto of Mozart, certainly one of the two greatest of all Mozart's works in this form.

To close the program, Arrau will play the fireworks of Liszt's Dance of Death, a piece not played on previous National Symphony concerts.

Opening the concert Mitchell lists a new overture by Spencer Huffman of Baltimore. Huffman's music in varying forms has been heard with approval in recent years. The new overture shared honors for native music with the second symphony of Howard Hanson.

Eddie Gallaher's record column is on page 7L.

Mitropoulos' Fine Account Makes 'Elektra' Great Set

complete. Orchestra and chorus from Florence May Festival, with soloists drawn from Vienna State Opera. Mitropoulos, conductor. Cetra 1209. $12.90.

Last winter Mitropoulos gave electrifying performances of Elektra in concert form, with the New York Philharmonic. His star was Astrid Varnay, who did the greatest singing of her career. Varnay was to have sung in the Florence festival performances, here recorded, but illness prevented it.

Hilde Konetzni took over the assignment without great success. Her work gives the notes but not the spirit of the tremendous tragedy. Neither does the other leading soprano, Daniza Hitsch, make Chrysothemis sound anything more than unpleasant.

Martha Moedl as Klytemnestra is an outstanding singer in every way. Her voice is easily equal to the terrific part, and her knowledge of the mood of the piece penetrates every phrase.

Among the men, Hans Braun as Orestes surpasses the rest, though Franz Klarwein as Aegisthus is adequate. But the thrill of this set comes through, even though it was recorded as in an actual performance and the singers are frequently too far from the mikes, etc.

For the thrill lies in Mitropoulos' sensational account of the orchestral music, and his enkindling treatment of the whole score.

In speaking of this great music, we must remind you of the brilliant records made by Beecham a couple of years ago, in which recording is superb and the singing better than this. What we need now is a recording equal to that one in technical details, but complete, or nearly so, as this one is.

WAGNER: Flying Dutchman. Complete performance. Bavarian State Opera Chorus and Orchestra under Clemens Krauss, with Viorica Ursuleac, Mary Luise Willer, Hans Hotter, Karl Ostertag. Mercury MGL 2. $15.55. $15.55.

Principal interest among the singers in this set lies in Hans Hotter, who is singing the role at the Met this year in their important revival of the Dutchman.

The recording is not entirely clear in spots, but the slight fuzziness is not a serious detraction. Leaving the part of Senta to the last, we have to report that Viorica Ursuleac no longer sounds half as thrilling and precise as she used to. Her years show clearly in her trials with the lengthy part—HUME.

Speaking of Christmas

Take Your Choice at the Galleries

By Jane Watson Crane

ON DISPLAY in the galleries this month are prints, water colors, oils, ceramics and small sculptures that would make distinctive and desirable Christmas gifts. In shape and price they are not out-size, being geared to the average home and pocketbook.

At the Arts Club the Washington Printmakers have a well-planned and selected show of work in the graphic arts by members and associates, augmented by a loan collection of prints from the Library of Congress featuring lithography by Bellows, Davies and Pennell, three masters who were among the first to raise the medium to the stature of a fine art.

Twenty-nine water colors by Prentiss Taylor, dating from 1933 to the present, are shown at the United Nations Club.

At the Phillips Gallery is a special exhibition of drawings by Ben Shahn, who can do wonders with the simplest things. His subjects are everyday—a bicycle, a Victorian housefront, a sewing machine, an arm upraised or a hand across the mouth. Economical use of line accentuates the stark directness of his statements.

There is a chance now to see work by one of the leaders of a new group which was formed in Munich since the war, for the Whyte Gallery has a one-man show by Ernest Geitlinger.

CONTINUING through November at the Barnett Aden Gallery is an exhibition of 20 American paintings, 14 of which were loaned by the Kraushaar Galleries in New York. The group was carefully selected for home consumption and contains many works of high calibre. Artists represented include Gifford Beal, Edward Bruce, David Burliuk, Eldzier Cortor, John Heliker, Robert Gwathmey, John Koch, Joseph Lasker, Andree Ruellan, Iver Rose, Henry O. Tanner and Esther Williams.

There is still a chance for Washington craftsmen to submit work for inclusion in the Christmas Mart exhibit which the Institute of Contemporary Arts will open November 26.

The mart will continue until Christmas eve, to be open Mondays through Saturdays from 12 to 7 p. m. For full details address the Institute, 1322 New York ave. nw.

A unique and ingenious display is offered by William N. Thompson at the Playhouse where his models, stage designs and costumes for the Erika Thimey dance group are shown.

Another worthwhile exhibit in the theater gallery program is Frank Alston's one-man show of paintings at the Dupont.

Opening this afternoon in the Silver Spring Art Gallery is a display of paintings by John Gernand, Marguerite Burgess and Harold Giese; ceramics by Joan Gaffney, Alexander Giampietro, Robert Chase and William Taylor. And continuing at the Glass House is the special exhibition of pottery by Gertrud and Otto Natzler of Los Angeles.

More art news on page 7L.

For devotees of the German expressionists, there is a representative selection of their graphic work shown at the Watkins Gallery, American University.

Godfrey's 'Mug' Working on New Show

Arthur Godfrey and his "strong right arm," Margaret "Mug" Richardson, at the CBS microphone not so long ago. After 16 years of affectionate teamwork, the rumbling chuckle and the suppressed giggle have parted—very amicably and with mutual esteem continued through breakfast (letters to answer), lunch (programs to plan and sponsors to entertain) and dinner. With luck, "Mug" got home by 9 p. m. She still has the accent.

During the first month she decided to quit—just as soon as she'd mastered the job. She wanted to show Godfrey she could do the back-breaking, head-aching job and then leave her short-tempered, unreasonable boss to his own devices.

But like most Godfrey employes ever since, "Mug" was soon overwhelmed by the underlying kindness, honesty, generosity, sympathy and hunger for appreciation that makes Godfrey's occasional temperamental behavior of little or no consequence.

IF A MAN breaks records out of temper, dashes cups of coffee up against a studio wall as Godfrey used to do and cusses out employes in public and still has them adoring him, and working with him long, long days over long, long years, there must be something there.

It's not money that holds them although Godfrey is not niggardly. ("Mug" was given a part interest in Arthur Godfrey Productions, Inc., over and above her salary, and still has it.)

It's just that he is—forgive us the word—lovable. Often it's the people who take the most abuse who understand and love him the most. Archie Bleyer, who leads the orchestra, cites Arthur as an example of sympathetic understanding of the other guy's feelings, yet Archie is called upon to jump through hoops all the time.

ARCH MacDONALD of WTOP used to share an office with Godfrey and they sometimes did each other's shows. Although Godfrey has far outstripped MacDonald in bank account and prestige, MacDonald harbors no jealousy. "There's one guy who got what he deserved," he says of Godfrey. The two used to tease each other unmercifully.

Godfrey was thick-skinned to all MacDonald's taunts except those about his singing. (He was struggling with singing lessons.) MacDonald would play a Godfrey recording, something Arch remembers as "I'd Love to Live in Dreamland With a Girl Like You." But he'd make an off-center hole in it so Godfrey's voice sounded perfectly horrible.

Godfrey got back. One Saturday afternoon while MacDonald was broadcasting a baseball game from ticker tape material fed into the studio, Godfrey got into another studio with a "live" mike and added hissing noises and hiccups to the MacDonald report. The audience thought their sportscaster was a little the worse for the bottle. But Arch thinks that joke was one of the funniest ever perpetrated.

ONE MAN who encountered him over the years at WTOP says he thinks Godfrey indulges himself in childish behavior that more civilized people content themselves with thinking wishfully about. But he likes the guy and admits that it is Godfrey's freedom in succumbing to his impulses that makes him a vivid entertainer. If he were more civilized in his behavior toward his employes and colleagues, he'd probably be more civilized in all his approaches to life—and wind up a frustrated little cog in the big wheel instead of a freely rolling big wheel himself.

Marie McGrain, phone operator who came to WJSV in October, 1932—just a few months before Arthur—is another one who adores him although she's had to duck some violent conversation and even an occasional material object that G. frey has thrown. When Marie cracked an elbow on the ice, Godfrey rushed her to his doctor and refused to let her pay the bill.

(Nobody in the Godfrey professional family is in want of anything as long as Godfrey knows. Christmas presents and special emergency loans which cannot be repaid go to anybody who works near him as well as for him. Elinor Lee, who used to collect the charity contributions at the station, remembers that he was always generous beyond his means even in the early days.)

Generous with time, too, although it is something he has practically none of. Godfrey rents limousines for friends visiting in New York—personally making the arrangements—if he can't squire them. He usually says no—resoundingly—to the idea of being interviewed, but once he's been confronted with an interviewer he wouldn't hurt the guy's feelings for the world and cooperates all he can.

When his long-time friend, Washington attorney Leo DeOrsey, was ill in Florida, Godfrey moved his show at considerable cost to Florida to be with him. Godfrey has spent hours—literally hours—hovering around the Washington Airport in a storm trying to pick up two friends he'd promised to fly to New York.

Weary, even as men in more tedious and less lucrative jobs, and depressed by world affairs, Godfrey's reserve of good nature is further sapped by constant and incredibly greedy pressure from strangers and an old hip injury which once used to ache so he'd shake all over and which still bothers him when he's tired. So he's not always as sunshiny as Humphrey Pennyworth. But his staff members can take his occasional buffeting pretty well; they are well cushioned by an enormous backlog of affection and sympathy their boss has shown them.

Swing Starts A New Show

"IT TAKES A HEAP o' livin' to make a house a home," and it takes a heap more than radio stations to make a network. The country's newest network, the Liberty Broadcasting System, which is acquiring stations so rapidly it won't give out an official count (something in the neighborhood of 300 is the estimate), has acquired the prime requisite for making stations into a network—a good "name."

SWING

In Raymond Swing, who began his series of weekday Washington-originated commentaries (6:30 p. m.) Nov. 6, Liberty has acquired a real top drawer man. A foreign correspondent and foreign affairs analyst since 1933, Swing is associated in most people's minds with brilliant wartime radio commentary—comprehensive discussions in a confidential, almost whispering, tone.

His current series, heard locally (recorded) at 6:30 on WOL and at 5 over the rest of the network, differs in no particular. The reading is still measured, authoritative, quiet. Sixty-three-year-old Swing has worked in the medium of world affairs since 1913 (at 23 he was managing editor of an Indianapolis daily) and says that "these are the most confused times I have ever lived in."

SWING GAVE UP broadcasting in 1948 to lecture and travel. The outbreak of hostilities in Korea brought him back to radio—for 13 weeks on WOR in New York and now on WOR-Liberty.

Since the new show is the first radio news many of his listeners get after their working day, it starts with a quick resume of the day's news. But the major part of the show is devoted to a discussion of some point Swing considers of great importance. It may not be what the other commentators are thumping that day, but it is something Swing thinks will help make us wiser because "we are going to have to be much wiser than we are now to avert a world catastrophe."

For those who are confused by the little things in the world as well as the big, catastrophic ones, it might be pointed out that this Raymond Swing is the Raymond Gram Swing of yore. He dropped the Gram when he and his wife were divorced. It was from her that he got it many long years ago. An ardent feminist, Betty Gram refused to change her name when she married. In a fairminded effort to assuage the lady's feelings and still keep hotel clerks' eyebrows at normal level, Swing became Raymond Gram Swing while Betty Gram became Betty Gram Swing. So, when the couple was divorced, they gave each other back their names.

Headaches

Are People Ready For Television Yet?

—By Saul Pett—

NEW YORK (AP).—Maybe we're not ready for television yet.

I mean any kind of television—black and white or color, 405 lines or 525 lines, 24 frames or 30 frames a second. Maybe we're just not ready for any of it.

Here's a look at some of the things that have been happening in addition to the headaches over color, screen size or where to put the antennae.

In New Haven, Conn., a woman was telephoning a friend. "I'm going out to the back yard," she said. "Too damn hot out in front." Wires were crossed somehow and the conversation was heard by a television audience of station WNHC.

In Kalamazoo, Mich., an 18-month-old baby became deathly ill from drinking kerosene while his parents watched television.

In Houston, Tex., television fans heard a man commit suicide at a Texas League basball game. After the shot the TV camera focused on his body. Justice of the Peace Tom Maes immediately returned an inquest verdict of suicide without leaving his home. "I saw the man on television," he said.

A LOCAL TELEVISION show from Chicago was seen on screens in Louisville, where it had no business. Another time, a TV show in London was seen in New York. NBC engineers attribute this to "temperature inversion," which has something to do with unusual changes in heat in the atmosphere and troposphere causing cold air to press down on hot air, or maybe it's the other way around.

There are signs that the animal kingdom is revolting. In Chicago, a rat crept into a television set. In Atlanta, a cat sneaked inside a receiver and jammed the sound reception.

In Baltimore, a moth put station WAAM-TV off the air for an hour. It flew into the machinery and caused a short circuit. Tubes blew out, fuses popped, and a flash of high voltage electricity solidly welded the vibrating contacts of a relay.

In Washington, the Better Business Bureau said complaints about television set sales and service comprise the number one beef reaching the bureau from around the country.

In Long Beach, Calif., Manuel Sanchez banged up his car and his wife as he tried to watch television while driving. The television he was trying to watch was in a store window.

DR. DANIEL L. MARSH, president of Boston University, warned that "if the television craze continues with the present level of programs, we are destined to have a Nation of morons."

A University of Southern California survey conducted by sociologist Edward C. McDonagh reported that conversation is down by 50 percent and reading all but forgotten among television families.

Checking 800 families around the campus, McDonagh found that:

Ninety percent are listening less to the radio; 75 percent are going to fewer movies; almost 50 percent attend fewer sports events; 100 percent do less pleasure driving, and 100 percent of the housewives complained they never went anywhere any more.

Study hours at Shaw High School in Cleveland were lengthened by 30 minutes for several reasons, among them the claim that television was keeping students away from their homework.

Burdick Junior High School in Stamford, Conn., made two surveys. First it found that children with TV sets at home watched television almost 4 hours a day, about 27 hours a week. But in the second survey it found that among children whose grades were falling and who had TV at home, only 9 percent of the lowered academic standing could be attributed to video.

'Dr. Christian' Films to Be Shown

THE "DR. CHRISTIAN" films which have come out of Hollywood over the years will be shown as a TV series on WTTG Mondays at 8. The series, "The Family Theater," will use other films as well, since there aren't enough old films about the kindly country doctor to make a complete series alone. Jean Hersholt stars as Dr. Christian.

JEAN HERSHOLT

Pictures to be included are "Meet Dr. Christian" scheduled for tonight, "They Meet Again," "Dr. Christian Meets the Women," and "Melody for Three."

WTOP-TV NOW goes on the air five minutes early (1:25 p. m.) with a news show.

PROBABLY no TV story in history ever sounded more universally appealing than tonight's "Lux Video Theater" program at 8 on WTOP-TV. It's the story of a bank executive who decides what he needs most is a week's rest in bed. Franchot Tone plays the lead.

THE NEW SHOPPING show sponsored by Woodward and Lothrop (Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 3:30 on WMAL-TV) will permit store customers to appear before the TV cameras as shoppers. The details of how to get into the act will be made known soon.

GLEN LANGAN and Mabel Taliaferro star in "The Floor of Heaven" tonight at 10 on WTOP-TV. It's the story of a dowager-despot of a New England family who tries to choose her granddaughter's husband.

MARGARET O'BRIEN, child star, appears in "The Canterville Ghost" at 9:30 p. m. on WNBW.

DENNIS DAY IS AUDITIONING a TV show with Gloria De Haven as his costar.

Gibbons Calls Plays in Stork Derby

THE EXTRAORDINARY discipline under which radio and TV sportscasters keep the stork is remarkable. WTTG's Bob Wolff became a father between an afternoon and evening assignment. And now Jim Gibbons, WMAL-TV sportscaster, has become a father for the fourth time, under circumstances which prove that attention to timing is not the exclusive province of radio and TV performers.

GIBBONS

Gibbons' daughter arrived Saturday afternoon, November 11—the first Saturday of the football season that her father did not have to be tearing all over the country to cover a collegiate game. Furthermore, the next day was a home game for the Redskins, which meant Gibbons didn't have to leave town for the first weekend in some time.

The prodigiousness of the feat can be measured by the times when it would have been inconvenient for the baby to arrive. To wit: Any day but Sunday from 6 to 9 a. m. when Gibbons does the early morning disc jockey show for WMAL; any weekday from 6:15 to 6:25 when he does a sports show on WMAL; any weekday from 7:15 to 7:30 when he appears on Sports Reel for WMAL-TV; any Monday night from 9 to 11 when he describes boxing on WMAL-TV; any Wednesday night from 9 to 11 when he describes wrestling, and any football season Saturday or Sunday afternoon.

MOREY AMSTERDAM will do his last "Broadway Open House" show tonight at 11 on WNBW. Amsterdam, who has been doing the Monday and Wednesday stints of this nightly comedy show, is heading back to a once-a-week format similar to his "Golden Goose Cafe" show on WTTG last year. Jerry Lester stays in the Tuesday, Thursday, Friday spot.

Minute Per Hour Is TV's Speed

THE FIRST hour-long film shot especially for TV will be shown tonight at 9 on WTOP-TV. An adaptation of Alexander Dumas' "The Three Musketeers," the show took just over 50 hours of shooting. The 23,000 feet of picture film shot—was subsequently edited down to 4710 feet. Since the finished show runs 52 minutes and 20 seconds, it's been computed that it took an hour of shooting for every minute of finished film.

"THE END GAME," by John P. Marquand, is tonight's "Pulitzer Prize Playhouse" presentation with Barry Nelson starring. Not a prize winner itself, it is the work of a prize-winning writer and is therefore eligible for the weekly WMAL-TV (9 p. m.) show.

POLYNA STOSKA, Met star, will be one of Morton Downey's guests tonight at 10 on WTOP-TV, with Herb Shriner.

Lyn Thomas is Constance in "The Three Musketeers" tonight at 9 on WTOP-TV when the first hour-long film made especially for TV is shown

TV Makes Mrs. Out of Imogene

IMOGENE COCA, pantomimist and comedienne on the Saturday night "Show of Shows" on WNBW (9 p. m.) labors long and hard to perfect her domestic skits with Sid Caesar. But she tosses it off lightly, explains: "The only difference between radio and television is that now when I walk down the street people say 'There goes Mrs. Sid Caesar.'"

FAYE EMERSON of the Tuesday-Thursday-Saturday show (WTOP-TV, 7:45) is being considered in connection with a husband and wife TV show as soon as she and Pianist Skitch Henderson are married. She's all signed for five years with Pepsi Cola on her current show, so this would have to be extra.

"FOUR FEATHERS," an English film about an English army officer who resigns when his regiment is assigned to Egypt and thereby incurs suspicion of cowardice, will be shown tonight at 10:30 on WMAL-TV. Ralph Richardson, C. Aubrey Smith and June Duprez, star.

WMAL Raises Own Talent

WMAL-TV FOUND a rose in its own back yard. When the call went out for an attractive and poised young lady to be assistant to Wilbur H. Youngman on a gardening show, 50 candidates showed up for auditions. But then there were 51. Roberta Rule, secretary to the program director, who has made several guest appearances on TV and has studied acting and modeling, said she'd like to try. She tried and was not found wanting in any particular.

The show which starts tonight at 6:45 on WMAL-TV will be devoted to cultivation of plots of all sizes, from pots to Virginia estates.

"THREE MEN on a Horse," all about a gentle greeting-card writer who picks horse race winners—with uncanny accuracy—as a hobby is scheduled for tonight on WTOP-TV at 8. Hiram Sherman plays the lead in the comedy.

Roberta Rule, a pretty blossom herself, is assistant to Garden Authority Wilbur H. Youngman, Tuesdays at 6:45 on WMAL-TV

Comedian Peter Lind Hayes, alias Captain Bligh, starts a new show tonight at 8:30 on WNBW with his singing wife, Mary Healy. It's called "The Peter and Mary Show"

Edgar Bergen Risks Turkey

THE MOST FAMOUS blockheads in history will dabble in early American history this afternoon at 4:30 on WTOP-TV when Charlie McCarthy and Mortimer Snerd mess around with the traditional Thanksgiving story.

The dummies make their TV debut on this special show along with their mouthpiece, Edgar Bergen, and a bit of Dixie fluff called Podine Puffington. It's to be a half hour production with Screen Star Diana Lynn as guest, and Bandleader Ray Noble (a latter day Pilgrim) Ercil Twing and a turkey.

PETER LIND HAYES, comedian and impersonator, and his singing wife, Mary Healy, now have a show of their own. Graduates of CBS's "Stork Club" series, they begin "The Peter and Mary Show" for WNBW tonight at 8:30 with Basil Rathbone and his playwright wife, Ouida, as guests along with Dancer Hal LeRoy.

THE PRESS-BOX: The controversy over the Daily News' election poll was ended with that newspaper's logic: "The score, of course, was not perfect. We picked the race as it was run, but expecting us to hit the percentage on the nose, would be like asking a horse player to pick the order of the finish in the Derby" . . . We agree with CBS' Douglas Edwards, who noted: "The newspaper people and the politicians who would like to hit the News over the head with this poll will have to wait until it makes the error of picking the wrong man. As it is, it is pretty hard to argue convincingly against a poll that picks the order of the finish in a four-cornered race" . . . Even the President predicted "a big Democratic victory" . . . Now he knows how we experts felt in '48 . . . From the Times: "Rudolph Bing made his Met debut and brought new singers, new sets, new ideas and even new prices" . . . and some old Nazis . . . The Trib's music critic, F. D. Perkins, fancy-shmancy reportage: "Many of its measures have a penetrating plangency" . . . he means it's too loud. UP reported Truman (back from his cruise) "is well tanned" . . . Aren't all the Democrats?

THE INTELLIGENTSIA: A. Vallentin's biography: "H. G. Wells, Prophet of Our Day" (John Day), startles you with revelations about the author's Casanova intimacies . . . When it's in a book it's biography; when it's in a colyum it's scandal . . . Stephan Lorant's biog on Roosevelt will be titled "FDR." It is due December 11 (Simon & Schuster) . . . Doubleday has reprinted (in one volume) Milt Gross' two literary parodies: "Hiawatta" and "Night Before Christmas." Literary belly-laughs . . . The most comprehensive biog yet on G. B. Shaw is being readied by Appleton. The author is Dr. Archibald Henderson . . . William and Mary (Virginia) is using the sexy novel, "The Widow," as a textbook for its English course . . . Pageant's new managing editor is Debs Myers, an ace on Yank during World War II . . . Noel Coward's new collection of short fables titled, "Star Quality," arrives via Doubleday in February . . . The word "frabjous" (which we said isn't in the dictionary) comes from the jabberwocky of Lewis Carroll's "Through the Looking Glass," according to 3275 colyum readers.

More About Faith Domergue

A serious auto accident almost destroyed her hopes and her beauty and it was while recuperating from this near-disaster that she had the good fortune to meet Hughes on his yacht.

NOW WHILE I have trouble making the dates I've been collecting through the years precisely gee with the details Miss Domergue told me with her own lovely lips, it is, you'll allow, an affecting tale for a "star" who's never appeared on any screen.

Looking back on the rich, full life that's been hers since Hughes first pinned his hopes on her, Miss Domergue is filled with gratitude for all he's done for her.

"Mr. Hughes," one of her agents remarked to me, "has said he'd make a star of her and he's done exactly that. He always does what he says he'll do and you can count on him. Look at what he did for Jean Harlow and Jane Russell."

"Well, now that you've got two pictures ready for release," I told Miss Domergue, "I hope it won't take so many years for another."

"Oh, no," she smiled. "Things have started now. And my second seven-year contract with Mr. Hughes allows me to make one film in that time for distribution to the Latin American countries. We even have a story in mind for that, which my husband will direct after we adopt it to the screen."

As I say, it's a very affecting tale and if Hughes is having any trouble finding a vehicle for Faith, it seems to me he could just take her own story and adopt it.

Masquers to Do 'Bravo!' Next Month

The Masquers of Roosevelt Center will present "Bravo!", the most recent collaboration of Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman, on December 15 and 16, under the direction of Pauline Eaton Oak.

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher

ON RECORDS

TIN PAN ALLEY is talking about: "Call Me Madam," especially "You're Just in Love," the charming song with the separately sung lyrics and obbligato which is the hit of the show. The song was inserted during the out-of-town tryout, so late that it is still not included in the customary list of songs from the show which appears on the cover of the "Call Me Madar" sheet music. Many professional music people believe that, despite the haste with which it was written, "You're Just in Love" is Irving Berlin's finest song.

Unfortunately, the record public will never get to hear the number as it is done in the show by Ethel Merman and Russell Nype. Because of contract commitments, Merman made the song for Decca with Dick Haymes; while Nype recorded it for RCA Victor with Dinah Shore. This is unfortunate, since the separate choruses are written so beautifully to emphasize the contrast in character between the brassy Merman personality and the romantic young Nype who is in love, not with Ethel, but with the ingenue in the show. Since none of the records brings out this contrast, many record lovers will compromise by acquiring the record by Perry Como and the Fontane Sisters.

Many show people, upon seeing "Call Me Madam," are amused at the way Merman manages to "upstage" the inexperienced Nype during this number so that she takes all the bows herself at the conclusion of each of the encores of the show-stopping duet, leaving Nype at that point with his rear end to the audience.

"OUT of This World," the new Cole Porter musical, the latest Porter score, everyone agrees, is tops. For a preview of the music, listen to "Nobody's Chasing Me", one of the wittiest songs of the season, recorded by no less than three lovelies, Evelyn Knight (Decca), Doris Day (Columbia) and Dinah Shore (RCA Victor).

"You're Just in Love" is by no means the only fine song in "Call Me Madam." The more one samples the riches of this score, be it "It's a Lovely Day Today," "The Best Thing for You" or any of the other lovely melodies, the more one is touched by the amazing gifts of Irving Berlin, the man with scarcely two years of grade school education who, at 62, still writes songs which are the envy and despair of his younger colleagues with the music degrees . . . Incidentally, the RCA Victor album with Dinah Shore and with members of the "Call Me Madam" cast is being held up until Dinah returns from her command performance in England. She will then remake "The Hostess With the Mostes' on the Ball" with a new lyric. After hearing the original version, record officials decided it was too naughty to be played on the air, according to my informants behind the scenes.

THE THREE SONGS which, despite the exciting new scores by Berlin and Porter, will probably be the real Hits of Tomorrow: One, "The Thing." This is a switch on an old college favorite, wherein certain spicy passages are hummed rather than sung. Phil Harris, who has never been noted for subtlety, has replaced the humming with the sound of banging. Look for this record to be heavily advertised, as the song was written by one of the bosses of Phil's record company . . . . Two, "Tennessee Waltz". Originally concocted and recorded two years ago by a hillbilly whose first name is, some feel, descriptive of his talents, Pee Wee King, this number has been brought into everyone's consciousness by the fine performance, in duet with herself of Patti Page (Mercury) . . . . . Three, "My Heart Cries For You", the newest attempt at a successor to "Cruising Down the River", sung by Guy Mitchell and Rosemary Clooney (Columbia) and by Dinah Shore (RCA Victor), who seems to record everything.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

Iva Kitchell Dances Dec. 6

IVA KITCHELL, the famed dance satirist, will be presented in a Lisner Auditorium recital Wednesday night, December 6 by the Institute of Contemporary Arts.

John Martin, dance critic of The New York Times, has described Miss Kitchell in these terms: "She ought to be compelled to travel about the country on the trail of the various ballet companies to restore sanity. Miss Kitchell is a whole corps de ballet in one and really goes to town. She is technically able to do the things she is burlesquing and this gives her an enormous advantage."

Reservations may be made at the Institute, 1322 New York ave., or at STerling 6266.

Metropolitan State

The thirteenth Metropolitan State art contest results are shown at the National Collection of Fine Arts. The event, held under the auspices of the D. C. chapter of the American Artist's Professional League and the Entre Nous Club, has brought out more than 300 entries, mainly oils and water colors, which crowd the walls and make it hard to get any kind of perspective on individual works.

UN's Decision to Issue New Stamps Displeases Collectors

By William M. Stuart

STAMP COLLECTORS are not pleased with the report that United Nations will issue a series of 15 stamps. Postoffice Department officials, including Postmaster General Donaldson, have already gone on record as opposing such a series. It is said these United Nations stamps will be in denominations of ½ cent to $5 and will be sold only at the headquarters in New York City. It is estimated an amount ranging from $300,000 to one million dollars will be cleared in this venture. Officials declare there is no necessity for a stamp issue as the mails will be carried as at present by the United States Postoffice Department.

STUART

For years some nations of Europe have issued many varieties of stamps, the main market being the American collector. It would seem infeasible that any stamp series could ever be issued by any agency of the United States for the simple reason of selling only to collectors regardless of legitimate mail. Such projects should not even be considered.

The Woodridge Stamp Club will meet tomorow evening at the Woodridge Public Library, 2206 Rhode Island ave. ne., at 9 o'clock.

At the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening the organization of the postal administration of the United Nations was stressed in a paper read by William M. Stuart. At this time the peliminary steps only have been taken and the stamp program cannot be announced because agreement has not been reached. The United Nations desires at least one stamp, but final action as to the issue of United Nations stamps will be made at a later date. Next meeting Tuesday night at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The first all-Liberia exhibition of postage stamps is being held November 18 to January 6, under the direction of Franklin R. Bruns, jr., agent of Liberia, at the National Philatelic Museum, Broad and Diamond sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

At the meeting of the General Services Administration Stamp Club tomorrow evening, R. G. Clinite will speak. The meeting will be held at 5:30 p. m. in room 6340, General Services Building, 19th and F sts. nw. At the meeting on November 6, Edward F. Callahan exhibited and talked on China stamps and J. R. Morton and William S. Hazzard talked and exhibited stamps of the United States.

HIGH IN AIR, two boats take-off at top speed from 20-foot springboard. Now see photograph at the lower right. →

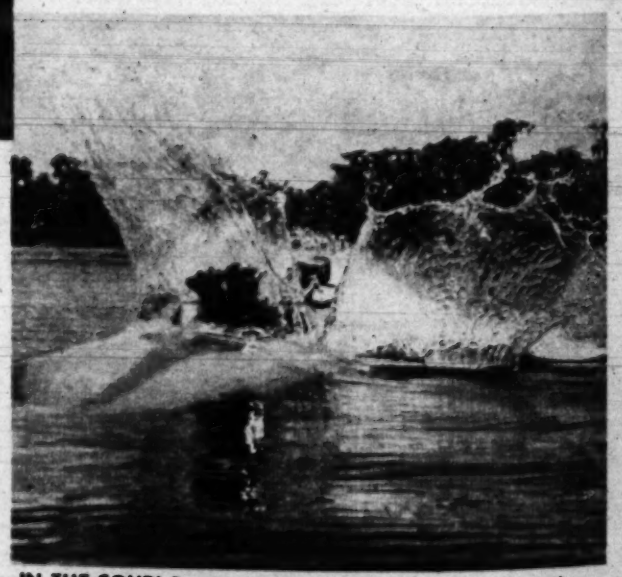
Madcap Boat Race

When a fleet of speedboat pilots start hurtling over tree stumps at 35 miles an hour you can expect almost anything to happen, as these pictures prove. They were taken at Cypress Gardens, Fla., during a race in which one boat was swamped, a second cracked-up against a tree and a third was catapulted into the air by a passing cruiser's wake. Obstacles included stumps, a canal and a clump of trees!

RAIL JUMP is cleared by racing boats. They're strongly built of light plywood, can hit over 35 miles an hour.

UP FOR AIR! Like swordfish surfacing, boat leaps clear of water. It was nearly swamped by cruiser's wake.

LAND HO! As race nears end, the boats hurtle across narrow peninsula. Pilots hoisted motors clear of land.



IN THE SOUP! Race ends for one driver as he misses jump, capsizes. Although three boats swamped no one was injured.

NBC'S ARTURO TOSCANINI: the cello player who tried . . .

The Turning Point

Courage in a crisis brought him recognition

AS ALL THE WORLD KNOWS, Arturo Toscanini, at 83, is one of the greatest orchestra conductors of all time. Yet except for a dramatic incident in Brazil, he might have remained an underpaid cello player.

Turn back the clock to June 15, 1886. Toscanini, the son of a poor tailor of Parma, Italy, was playing cello in an Italian opera company.

On the night of the 15th, the troupe was in Rio de Janeiro. Just before the curtain went up, a Brazilian guest conductor quit in a huff.

When the troupe's own Italian conductor tried to conduct, the Brazilian audience hissed him.

In desperation, one of the opera singers turned to the cellist, Toscanini: "Arturo, you know the music. At least go out and try to conduct."

▶ Toscanini tried one of the most daring feats in opera history. He knew that only by impressing the audience could he stop the hissing. He stepped quietly to the podium and, while the audience gasped, he closed the musical score lying on the stand before him.

▶ Then, as though it were the most natural thing in the world to conduct an entire opera from memory, he lifted his baton and led the orchestra through Aida!

▶ The Brazilian audience, understanding the magnitude of the feat, sat in wondering silence. After the final curtain, they cheered. The orchestra had played the entire opera by memory!

Toscanini's feat not only kept the troupe intact: it brought him to the attention of directors in Europe.

Years later, he was congratulated by a musician who had been a member of his 1886 audience. "You didn't make a single mistake," he said. "Oh, but I did," Toscanini replied. "In fact, twice. But you never noticed!"

on parade: even a Duke has to wait—sometimes

Duke of Edinburgh says "Goodbye" to friends at airport . . . But where IS that plane? No smiles now, only boredom . . . Ready to leave at last! Everybody's happy again.

YES! NO!

WITH-OR WITHOUT RINSING—

Tide does a better washing job than any soap on earth!

Whichever way you wash — Tide gives you WHITE, BRIGHT, DAZZLING CLEAN CLOTHES!

Yes, Tide lets you wash whichever way you prefer . . . and does a better washing job than any soap you can name! Tide, unlike soap, forms no sticky, dulling soap film. That's one reason why Tide-washed clothes look so fresh and bright. (And iron so smoothly!) And Tide actually dissolves dirt out of the clothes . . . holds dirt suspended in the sudsy water! As clothes go through the wringer, dirt wrings out with the washwater—and you hang up the kind of bright, clean wash that makes neighbors look twice! Try it and see! Get Procter & Gamble's Tide today—there's nothing like it!

Never before Tide could you wash your heaviest, dirtiest clothes SO CLEAN!

- Leaves no soap film ever!
- Miracle clean clothes—with or without rinsing!
- Dazzling white clothes—with no bleach or bluing!
- Soap-dulled colors actually come bright and fresh!
- Clothes dry soft—iron beautifully! And Tide is safe for all washable colors—all washable fabrics—rinse or no rinse!

"Tide gets clothes so white and clean—it's like a present every washday!"

says Mrs. Carrie Marshall, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Every washday I feel like saying a big thank you . . . 'cause the way Tide gets clothes so white and clean is just like getting a present! The nickel hamburger: today it's so rare that a . .

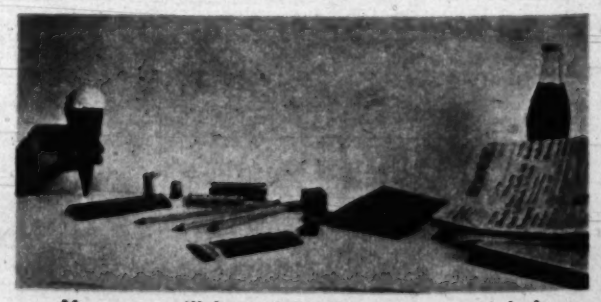
Good-bye

MAYBE it's a good thing that they dropped the buffalo from the nickel a few years ago.

If Old Shaggy Face were on the new nickels today, he'd be only a shadow of his old, plump self.

That's because the nickel is steadily shrinking—in value. As a matter of fact, things have reached such a state that it's no longer a coin for even a buffalo to brag about. It's sad but true: the nickel appears to be travelling the road of the U.S. half-penny, the three-penny bit and the two-and-a-half-dollar gold piece. Of course, the Mint will keep on making nickels for a long time to come, but what you can do with one today shouldn't happen to a lead plug. Look at the record.

The good old nickel beer? You should have such dreams! (You won't find it anywhere else.) Even the nickel cup of coffee is fast becoming a collector's item. And in all the 3,026,789 square miles of the



You can still buy these items for a nickel.

These are sad days for the old

Utah restaurant featured it as a one-day stunt.

Nickel?

U.S. about the only place you could buy a hamburger for a nickel in recent months was at "Snappy's" in Provo, Utah (above). And Snappy's was a one-day stunt.

In a big U.S. city like Chicago, the last strongholds of the nickel are a few candy bars and a phone call (which may go to a dime before long). In New York, the proud boast of the "longest ride in the world for a nickel" is just a memory. Today, New Yorkers have to drop a dime in the subway turnstile.

The Nickel Cigar

Even in Washington, the nickel seems to be going the way of the cigar store Indian. The parking meters still have a nickel slot, and one drug chain still offers three brands of nickel cigars. "But not for long," says the manager. "The five-cent cheroot is fading fast."

You can buy a spool of thread for a nickel in the nation's capital, but the yardage is down as much as 25 percent. A five-cent box of tacks now costs a dime – it's slightly larger.

In St. Louis, you can buy an ice cream cone for a nickel, but five cent toys are disappearing.

A few years ago, you could buy an all-day sucker for a nickel. Today, in one city at least, even the price of the lollipop has soared. A junior informant from Houston, Texas, reports that man-sized suckers are 10 to 15 cents.

The coin machine people are getting quietly desperate. There are fewer and fewer things they can vend for a nickel.

"In six months," one chocolate bar man has predicted sadly, "you won't be able to buy a single candy bar that contains chocolate anywhere for a nickel."

High Prices Did It!

The nickel's demise began with World War II. For a while last year it looked as though the old coin might even recover its old popularity–and purchasing power. But then prices shot up.

"Sure, there'll always be a nickel," says one graybeard with a clear memory of the old nickelodeon. "You can always put two together – and make a dime!"

How "nerves" cause Smash-

Skill is not enough. It takes a "healthy" personality to be

IN DETROIT, not long ago, cops and traffic court judges decided to crack down on their city's growing list of traffic violators. And they cracked down hard.

Motorists convicted of drunken driving were hustled off to jail (PARADE, July 15, 1950). So were reckless speeders.

In the first five months of vigilant enforcement there were only 73 traffic deaths —compared to 107 for the preceding six months. But in the meantime, a tremendous increase in traffic was taking place. And with it, the injury rate was up: 7,767 persons were injured in the first five and one half months of the crackdown as compared to 6,521 for the preceding six months.

Since January of this year alone, Detroit's heavy traffic has increased nine percent! And more cars on the streets naturally are an open invitation to more accidents.

And so in Detroit, as in many another accident-conscious city, worried officials and thoughtful citizens are beginning to wonder if strict law enforcement by itself can ever do more than hold the line. What, then, is the real solution to our accident problem?

Along with good road design and proper enforcement, traffic experts say, motorists need a new, realistic mental approach; they need to recognize that with traffic soaring to astronomical proportions on overburdened roads and streets, they can no longer hope to maintain fast, uninterrupted speeds.

Furthermore, the new motorist must be a calmer man—reconciled to traffic delays and alert to the emergencies that congestion always causes. The real approach to accident prevention on today's busy roads, says Dr. Herbert J. Stack of New York University, lies deep in the motorist's own mind—and in what we call his "nerves."

'What Goes' in a Driver's Brain?

AND IT IS precisely the motorist's mind and nerve-reactions that Dr. Stack and his colleagues at NYU's Center for Safety Education are probing. They're doing it with psychological tests, with modern scientific aids which give them a real picture of what goes on in a motorist's brain.

They call their study psychophysics—mental conditioning as it affects body responses in driving. Here are samples of the kind of problem they're coping with:

▸ The case of Mrs. M: Middle-aged, experienced and careful, she was driving at night when she suddenly spotted a giant trailer-truck looming in front of her. She shrieked and threw up her hands—but made no effort to apply the brakes or swerve aside. Result: a bad smash-up, from which she barely emerged alive. Question (says Dr. Stack): WHY didn't she swerve? What was going on in her brain that kept her from doing the simple things that would have saved her? What was wrong with her "nerves"?

▸ The case of Bill W, a high school senior: He's the blustering type of kid, always wanting to push in cafeteria line-ups, always trying to race in his hot rod. In traffic, he can never stay in one lane; he speeds habitually. He's had several accidents. Why? "To be sure," says Dr. Stack, "it's his 'nerves.' It's easy to see that something's eating Bill mentally that causes him to do these foolish things physically. Our job is to find out just what's bothering him—and until we do, maybe we'd better keep Bill off the road."

▸ The case of John B: John crossed the same railroad right-of-way every morning, and pretty soon he forgot to look. You know the rest. But what killed John wasn't just a train: It was the mental laziness, bad training, or just forgetfulness that let him ignore a danger he knew existed.

Here's what this adds up to: "Our figures," says Dr. Stack, "show that in 80 percent of all accidents, some motor vehicle law has been violated. Yet the violation itself isn't the real root of the accident. What we must know before we can cut accident rates is:

● DR. HERBERT J. STACK, Director of New York University's Center for Safety Education, believes most accidents are caused by slow reaction by drivers. "Cars have gotten faster and more powerful," he says, "but the driver is about the same as he was back in 1900."

WHY did the driver violate the law in the first place?"

Dr. Stack's research has thrown special light on the whole problem of accident repeaters. (They're drivers who have accidents again and again—so that, as one study has revealed, five to ten percent of all our drivers are causing a whacking 35 percent of our accidents!)

"We're especially interested in studies of 'repeaters' in Connecticut and Michigan," says Dr. Stack. "Studies in both states have shown that repeaters tend to have (1) personality maladjustments and (2) poor phyups!

a safe driver

sical coordination. Both characteristics are psychophysical."

A study of these "repeaters" showed that their attitude toward other drivers was poorer than that of accident-free drivers.

For example:

- They tended to consider driving a competitive affair.
- They labor under the delusion that other drivers are always "out to beat them."
- They showed a stronger tendency to return their headlights to bright if an approaching driver fails to dim his.
- They showed a significant preference for higher speeds.
- They showed a tendency to brag about the amount of liquor they could consume.
- "Repeaters" have a record of law violations, not only in traffic but in other fields.
- They have a poorer sense of distance.
- They make poor scores on safety tests.

What Can Be Done?

LOOKING AT growing evidence, Dr. Stack and other experts think "accident repeaters" CAN be helped by special tests.

Regular psychophysical examination of "repeaters," they believe, would be helpful.

Among the tests they have devised is one for driver stability (right). The driver is required to run a stick with a metal point through a maze without touching the sides of the track. Even accident-repeaters can do this well. But then disturbing effects are added: lights flash in their eyes and sounds of horns, whistles and screeching brakes pour into their ears. When this happens, the repeaters tend to have trouble.

By such tests, each state could discover unfitness among accident-repeaters.

What can be done to control "repeaters"?

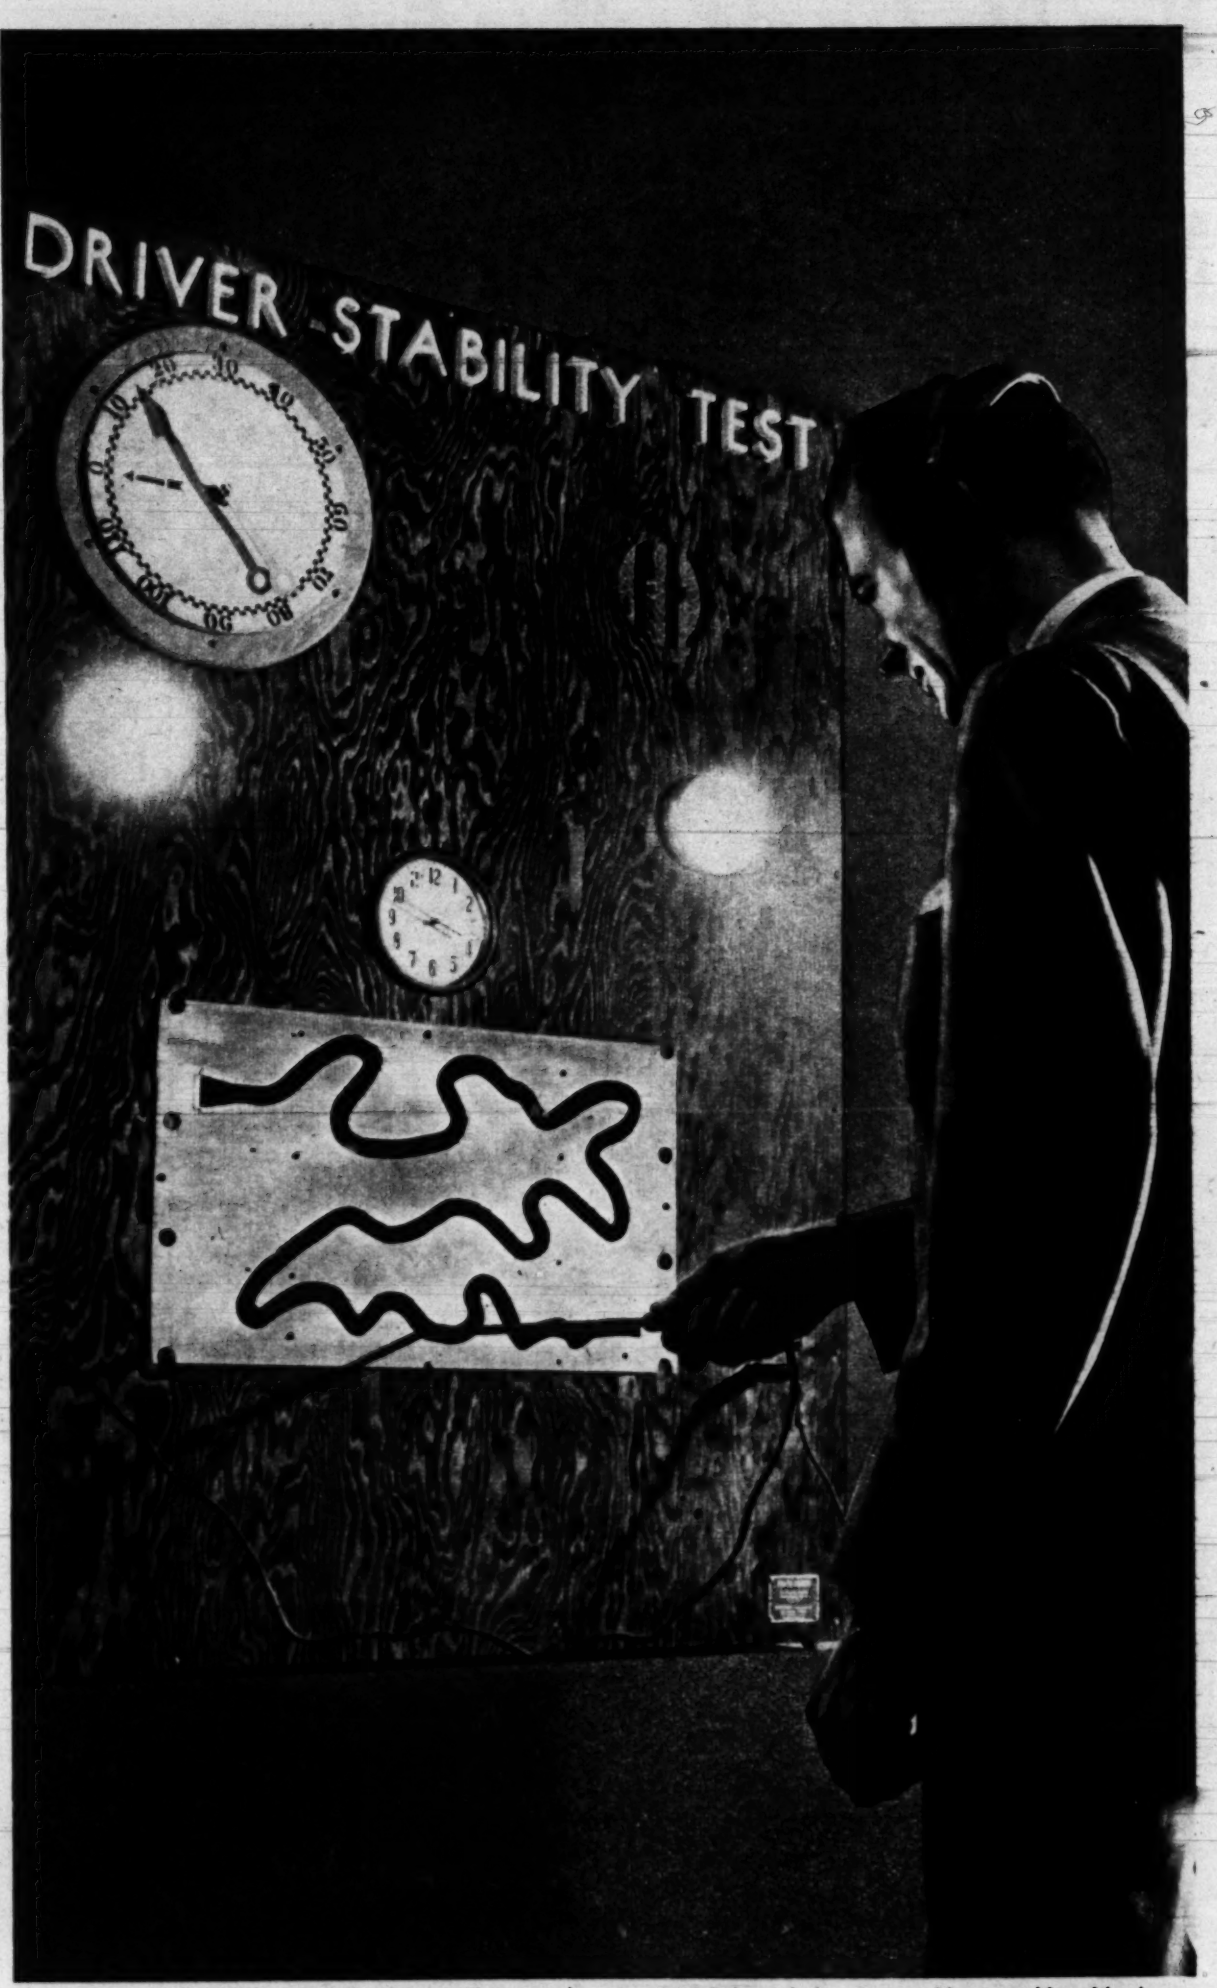
(A) In the first place, traffic experts say, a good many more states can "tighten up" by suspending licenses of chronic "repeaters."

(B) In all states, psychophysical tests should be compulsory, Dr. Stack believes, for drivers who have had two bad accidents.

(C) Tests should also be available, he suggests, to other drivers who feel they might profit by them to assure their own safety.

For the aim of psychophysical testing, Dr. Stack says, is self-improvement and prevention—not punishment.

Millions of drivers, by discovering their weaknesses in time, can safeguard themselves, their families, and others!



GLARING HEADLIGHTS flash in his eyes and horns and brakes screech through the loudspeaker as driver tries to pass stick through the groove without touching sides (see story). Neurotic drivers usually get angry and rattled.

LADY American finds shooting stick fine for eating hot-dogs. English disapprove.

SEATS GET BIGGER

SEE THE PEOPLE sitting down standing up? They are sporty Americans with their new, specially-made English "shooting sticks!"

▸ What are English shooting sticks? They are one-legged folding seats the sporty English sit down on at their hunting shoots!

▸ Why are they specially-made? Because the English have discovered that what Americans sit down on has to be wider than what the English sit down on. In fact, 6½ inches wider!

Trying to sell Americans something, the English asked themselves, "Why don't sporty Americans buy sporty English shooting sticks?" They sent over a trade expert. He measured the American seat. He measured the English stick.

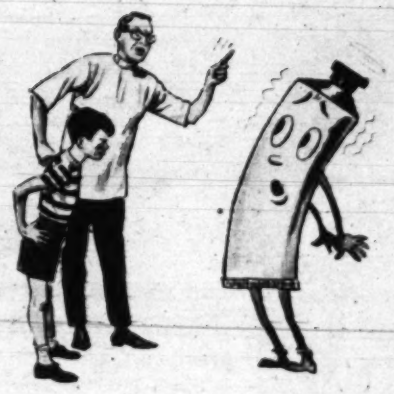
"Aha," he said, "Americans can't sit on English sticks!" Rushing back to England, he had the sticks enlarged from 10½ to 17 inches across. We are still a great and growing country!

American sitting on extra-wide English shooting stick still overlaps at the sides!

Can a dentifrice stop this?

Squibb gives you facts!

1. There's No Such Thing as a Miracle Dentifrice. You see, many things cause tooth decay . . . eating wrong foods especially during childhood, illness, infections, metabolic defects, and acids that form in your mouth after you eat. That last cause is the only cause that any non-prescription dentifrice can help combat.



2. Brushing After Every Meal Helps. Bacteria in your mouth turn food particles into dangerous acid. Squibb Dental Cream helps neutralize acids with magnesium hydrate . . . helps make them harmless.

3. The Best Way to Fight Decay. Use a reliable dentifrice after every meal when acid formation is at its peak. See your dentist twice a year for a thorough cleaning and check-up. Take his advice for between-visit tooth care. He's still your best protection against needless worry, pain, expense.

REMEMBER THESE FACTS; NO OTHER DENTIFRICE CAN HELP:

1. neutralize acid more effectively
2. clean the teeth with safety more thoroughly
3. give you a cleaner, fresher mouth and breath . . . than reliable Squibb Dental Cream.

Non-soapy . . . moderate foaming action . . . harmless if swallowed . . . restful taste of fresh mint

Haunted Island

Strange legend clings to lonely Bird Rock

By RICHARD HARRINGTON

BIRD ROCK, Quebec.

FAR UP here in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, midway between Newfoundland and the Magdalen Islands (see map right), is one of the loneliest lighthouses in the world.

It is Bird Rock light, perched on a windswept, seven-acre crag squarely in the sea lanes. A strange legend clings to the rock, like the mist and fog that hide it from view much of the time.

No man, says the old legend, will keep Bird Rock lighthouse for more than ten years without meeting misfortune! Only twice in 80 years has this prophecy been upset!

To find out more about this dire place, I recently visited Bird Rock. Getting there was a feat in itself.

Seas Were Too Big

I made the trip from the Magdalens in an open boat, a 35-footer with a powerful engine. Rough seas turned us back, and we tried again next day.

As we neared the island, I realized why it was called Bird Rock. Its 120-foot sandstone cliffs were literally alive with birds. Millions of gannets, gulls and puffins clung to the ledges or wheeled overhead, screaming like tormented banshees. I learned later that the Rock had been made a bird sanctuary, and its bird colony is believed the largest on the Atlantic coast.

The Rock's flat surface is treeless and covered with lush grass. I saw about 10 buildings, a radio mast and, above all, the lighthouse itself. Ominously, it is braced on all sides by strong cables – to hold it against the great gales of the lower St. Lawrence.

I was interested in the present keeper, Alfred Arsenaut, a French Canadian of about 60, who has defied the prophecy since 1943. He told me that the prophecy of misfortune was made in 1870 by the ARSENAUT'S grandson perches on "fog cannon." Earlier ones blew up, killed 3.

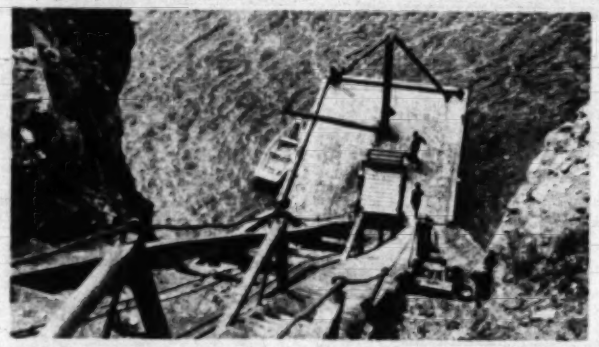
FROM A DISTANCE, Bird Rock looks like an aircraft carrier. At right is Little Bird Rock, swarming with gannets.



STAIR from wharf at top of Rock has 146 steps. "Lift" (on dock) is pulled up rails at left by winch and cables.

Rock's first keeper, M. Guitte, a Frenchman.

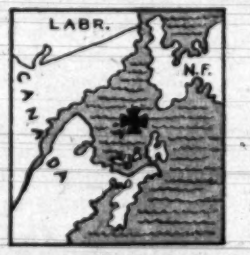
Guitte resigned after three years, driven nearly mad by loneliness. Disaster after disaster followed:

▸ 1880: Keeper Patrick Whalen, his son and a companion went seal hunting on the ice floes. A gale blew the floes out to sea. Whalen and his son froze to death. The other man lived.

▸ 1881: Charles Chiasson, the next keeper fired the cannon used to warn ships during fogs. The cannon exploded, killing Chiasson, his son and a visitor.

▸ 1891: A second explosion of the cannon tore off the hand of Telesphore Turbide, the next keeper.

▸ 1897: On March 7, the accident of 1880 was repeated in the same grim pattern. The keeper and two companions went hunting on the ice floes. A sudden squall shifted the ice. Two men froze to death the first night. The survivor drifted on a floe for three days and nights, reached land. But he died 15 days later.



Cross locates Bird Rock. Light there is maintained by Canadian Government.

▸ 1897: On June 12, Keeper Pierre Bourque narrowly missed death when the cannon exploded the third time. His assistant was seriously wounded. But the next victim was Bourque's son, Wilfred, next keeper.

▸ 1909: Keeper Wilfred Bourque's body was found at the foot of the cliffs.

▸ 1922: Thirteen years passed—contrary to legend—without mishap. Then in 1922 everybody on the Rock was poisoned by rainwater collected for drinking. The keeper's brother and an assistant died.

Most recent victim was Edmund Arsenaut, a relative of the present keeper. One day, Arsenaut walked off a boat in the darkness – and vanished.

When Alfred Arsenaut had finished telling me the story of Bird Rock, I asked him if he worried about the prophecy. He shrugged.

As I looked at Arsenaut's quiet, sturdy face I had the sudden thought: "This quiet man can defeat the prophecy!" Only time will tell.

8:35: Resigned to going, Betsy reads funnies while waiting for her breakfast.

9:30: Dressed in Sunday best, fully-recovered Betsy puts on white gloves.

10:15: In Sunday School, Betsy and Caroline Gross sedately sing "Jesus Wants Me for a Sunbeam." Between songs, they study the Scriptures.

LIKE MOST American youngsters, 8-year-old Betsy Crockett, of Camden, Me., likes Sunday School, but hates getting up for it.

Here, in pictures, is the weekly rite of getting her started, and what she does in School.

As usual, she wakes in the sunny Sabbath silence, thinking up excuses to stay in bed.

As usual, her mother, brisk Baptist Edith Crockett, wins.

But according to alarmed church leaders, not all mothers succeed. Only half of America's children get to Sunday School!

11:05: Caroline and Betsy romp down the church steps showing off clothes.

11:30: Walking hand-in-hand, they go home feeling fine and hungry.

Our golden brown turkey, filled with new and luscious Walnut-Raisin stuffing, is garnished and garlanded, ready for the annual feast of feasts!

Walnut-Raisin Stuffing!

By Beth Merriman, PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

EVERYONE can have a turkey dinner at home this year, no matter how small the family. Poultrymen now offer "tailored" turkey—"baby" birds, small and tender enough for frying; specially bred roasting turkeys weighing only 6 to 10 pounds; turkey in parts; boned, roast turkey, in a casing of crisp skin, plus a packet of condensed gravy; and delicious boned turkey in cans. Whatever type you buy, you're sure to want stuffing. Our recipe is easily divided to make a smaller amount, and can be baked in a covered casserole in a moderate oven if you decide against serving a whole roast turkey.

Walnut-Raisin Stuffing

4 medium onions, coarsely grated; ¾ cup butter or margarine; 16 cups (4 quarts) whole wheat bread crumbs; 2 cups chopped walnuts; 1 cup golden seedless raisins; 2 cups finely diced celery; ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 tablespoon salt; 2 tablespoons poultry seasoning; hot water.

Cook onions in butter or margarine until soft but not brown; add to crumbs. Add remaining ingredients with enough hot water to make fairly moist. Yields enough stuffing for an 18 to 20 lb. turkey.

Garnish for Turkey

Place small mounds of stuffing on pineapple slices. Broil. Top with whole walnut meats. Place around turkey.

IF ONION is coarsely grated, not chopped, flavor will spread through the stuffing during roasting.

USE poultry pins and white twine to lace opening. Truss wings and legs close to body with twine.

DIP cloth or turkey jacket in hot water, then in melted fat; cover turkey; roast in moderate oven.

THE PICTURES above are probably the most revealing ever taken of one of America's busiest women in some of her busiest moments. This is the Eleanor Roosevelt thousands of Americans see when they attend UN sessions here. She is the only American woman in the Assembly and is chairman of the Commission on Human Rights.

Few of the many pictures taken of Eleanor Roosevelt have shown so clearly the quiet forcefulness with which she applies herself to problems.

It takes an average of 5 long years before a coffee tree matures and reaches normal production.

The average mature tree yields the equivalent of only 1½ pounds of roasted coffee annually.

About 3500 hand-picked coffee beans make 1 pound. Yet coffee, at home, costs just a few pennies a cup!

No "DENTURE BREATH" for me*

*"Every day I soak my plates in a solution of Polident and water. My mouth feels clean and cool all the time . . . and no Denture Breath."

YOU know what Mr. R means—don't you! It's a wonderful feeling to know that you're not offending friends with Denture Breath. And it's great when your plates feel clean and cool and fresh—from their Polident bath.

Soak your plates in Polident every day. It's so easy and quick. And Polident soaks into every corner and crevice—places brushing never seems to reach.

Remember—those dental plates of yours need the special care of a special denture cleanser. Don't brush them. Soak them in Polident (for only about a cent a day) to keep them sparkling with the original natural look—and free from Denture Breath! So get a can of Polident tomorrow, sure.

NO BRUSHING

Use Chewing-Gum Laxative—REMOVES WASTE...NOT GOOD FOOD

● When you can't sleep—feel just awful because you need a laxative—do as MILLIONS do—chew FEEN-A-MINT.

FEEN-A-MINT is wonderfully different! Doctors say many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon...right in the stomach. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy...you feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that weak, tired feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel fine, full of life! 25¢, 50¢, or only 10¢

IN PASADENA, Calif., the other day, a photographer named Bob Cox got to watching what happens to pretty girls' eyes when they spot a handsome stranger. With the help of artificial eyes and expert make-up, he worked out a way to read a young lady's mind – or rather, two minds. The eyes fastened to her face, Cox says, reveal what she really thinks. Her own eyes show the stranger what he is supposed to think she thinks. Captions under the above pictures are Cox's.

WHAT HAPPENS AFTER DEATH?

In a few score years, all who read these lines will have vanished from the face of the earth.

Every day, almost a hundred thousand human beings finish their earthly span and pass off into the vast beyond. That our turn will come we all know, but when and where and how we cannot be sure.

No merely human being ever has been able to look into eternity and tell us what it is like. No scientific knowledge or scientific instruments can pierce the curtain that divides this world from that into which all of us must eventually journey.

All we know about God's eternal plans for us... all we know about what lies beyond the grave ... comes from the God Who made us and to the extent He has seen fit to reveal it to us.

But we can face eternity without fear. For we do have a definite answer to the mystery of death. With the facts God has put at our disposal through the inspired books of the Old and the New Testaments, the Catholic Church always has given, and gives today, a definite answer to the tremendously important questions raised by the fact of death.

Man's life in this world, the Church tells us, is a preparation for the world to come... a testing-time which ends with our death. What happens after that depends on whether death finds us loyal to God, or opposed to Him and the way He expects us to live. "... it is appointed unto men once to die and after this the judgment" (Heb. IX:27).

Christ gave us (Matt. XXV) a description of God's judgment which leaves no room for doubt that our worthiness of everlasting reward will be judged solely according to the way we have lived our lives on this earth.

Death does not bring merely a long, unconscious slumber, but rather a quick awakening to the irrevocable judgment of our Creator. Nor does it bring us a second chance to prove ourselves or to amend our erring ways. In our own hands rests the opportunity ... and upon our own heads the responsibility ... to determine if death shall be the threshold to everlasting life among the blessed, or among the lost.

Men blessed by youth and good health often feel that death for them is far away—something to be worried about only in the twilight years. Some scoff at the suggestion that an everlasting hell could be permitted by a merciful God. Others seem to think that God will treat them kindly if they live reasonably moral lives, even though they pay Him no special honor which is His due.

FREE—But whatever they think ... however they avoid the question ... all men must eventually face the fact of death. To think about it wisely ... and in time ... is the most important thing in our lives. If you would like more information on this subject ... on Heaven, Hell, Purgatory, the end of the world and the resurrection and judgment of all men...we shall be happy to send you an interesting pamphlet free of charge. Write today for Pamphlet No. 14—PR.

CANDID camera catches Pinza munching. An enthusiastic photographer, he specializes in pictures of his children.

Ezio had his troubles

ON LOCATION, a frightened horse stumbled, and threw Pinza. Said Pinza: "He's camera-shy; me, too!" Hollywood is not so sure. Once he was called to a meeting. "Go ahead, we'll cut to someone else," said the director. Ezio asked if that meant taking the camera away from him. Told yes, he replied, "Forget the meeting, I'll stay.".

BETWEEN scenes, Lana and Pinza enjoy a chuckle over family snapshots. They spent eight weeks making the film.

AT DRESS REVIEW preceding tent-pegging match, Governor General's Guard stands rigid at attention. Guard inherited traditions of Bengal Lancers.

A New Troop of

Bengal Lancers

Show their skill as horsemen on plains of Pakistan

BY FRANK DeBLOIS

ALMOST LEGENDARY are the deeds of the Bengal Lancers, the native cavalry who for generations protected Great Britain's Indian Empire from the savage tribesmen of the northwest frontier.

They have disappeared from the mountain passes they used to guard. But their brilliant military traditions live on in the tough, colorful Pakistan Guards.

One of the traditions Pakistan's guardsmen have inherited from the original Lancers is the sport of tent-pegging –the wildest horse race in the East (see pictures). The race is run in heats with four lancers abreast. At the starter's signal, the riders tear down the track, lances held low and aimed at four tent pegs peeking from the ground 100 yards away. Winner is the rider who first carries his peg across the finish line on his lance.

In the infant Republic of Pakistan, faced today with the old dark threats from across the Afghan frontier, and by a new and brooding silence from the Soviet, the Lancers' work is tremendously important. Officially the riders are known as the "Governor General's Body Guard."

They Are Mechanized, Too

This spectacular Guard is the only mounted cavalry unit left in Pakistan. It serves a double function. As a ceremonial Guard, it adds the touch of pageantry to state functions. But at the same time it is equipped with the arms of mechanized war. The Guards are as much at home on battle maneuver as they are astride their handsome bays in colorful dress parade.

The Jawans (soldiers) of the Guard – they have been called the handsomest men in all Pakistan – are at least six feet tall. They belong to the Tiwana, Awan, Moghul and Rajput tribes of the Punjab and have looked forward since youth to duty in the crack horse regiments of the frontier. In their scarlet tunics and spangled turras (turbans) they are as spectacular as any warrior out of the pages of Kipling.

MECHANIZED and alert on northwest frontier, guardsmen are equally at home in tanks.

Waving pliers disarmingly, Norton welcomes unsuspecting visitor to his dentist's chair.

A visit to a fiendish dentist's office

CHICAGO.

ALTHOUGH there's really nothing funny about a toothache, people are convulsed by merriment whenever someone else has to go to the dentist. If you're the type that likes to plant horns on his dentist, you'll appreciate this visit to "Doctor" Cliff Norton, TV comic turned bicuspid-blaster – the most sadistic fiend who ever held a drill.

"Now open your mouth and we'll look at your teeth!"

"Horrors! What a cavity! Hand me my drill!"

"Now just relax. This is going to hurt a little."

"Have you ever taken gas? Hold the cloth like this."

". . . and breathe deeply, deeply, ah . . . ah . . . zzzz!"
